

Police Reform Will Be Chief Issue This Year In Political Contests

Councilmanic and Aldermanic Line-Up for Next Primary Is Given in Full Detail.

EXPECT TWO TICKETS ON CLEAN-UP QUESTION

Women of Atlanta Will Take an Active Part in the Support of Reform Candidates.

By HENSON TATUM.
With the primary election date yet unfixed, fourteen candidates for city council were in the field Saturday. Four wards already have contests, all pitched on the straight issue of a clean-up in police affairs, and the same issue will be fought out in every ward. It is said that the representative asking re-election ignored the voice of three grand juries and the findings of council's own bunco probe committee regarding unsatisfactory of the police heads and a clean-up of the department.

Other candidates are expected to announce within the next few days. It appears highly probable that before the campaign gets well under way there will be two straight tickets supported by organized movements, one based on the theory of sweeping reform and the other on the theory of the present police force. The women have given notice that they are going to take a hand in every ward and intend to stand behind candidates who will promise to bring about reforms that mean a better police force.

Three aldermen and eleven councilmen are to be elected. Aldermanic places are open in the First, Fifth and Tenth wards, and candidates for these offices will be voted on by the city at large.

In the second ward, Councilman Al Martin, one of the principals, under the bunco probe, has not announced for re-election.

There are three candidates to succeed him, two of whom are pledged to police reorganization to the extent of placing both police and detective departments under one head.

These are Fred C. Mingo and John A. Culver.

The third aspirant, Dr. P. L. Moon, at present a member of the board of health, asserts that he will support any constructive movement, but has committed himself no farther.

Councilman Claude Bailey, of the Fourth ward, who voted for Beavers but against Poole, and who declared Saturday that "my hat is right in the middle of the ring," is opposed by L. A. Trowbridge on a platform to unequivocally uphold the majority report of council's probe committee.

Baker in Race.
Councilman Alvin Richards, of the Sixth ward, who expressed his disbelief in the majority findings by voting to exonerate both Beavers and Poole, and who also announced Saturday that he would support Dr. L. P. Baker, whose campaign manager, W. W. Waites, said has built the foundation of his platform on the majority report.

Another defender of the accused police heads, Councilman J. H. Olson, of the Eleventh ward, is running with Homer C. Denton, young attorney and advocate of changes in police government.

"We have some good men on the force, especially Chief Beavers," said Mr. Denton, "but I am in favor of abolishing the police board and consolidating the police and detective forces under one head."

INCOME TAX BILL TO CAUSE HEATED FIGHT THIS WEEK

Much Interest Centered in House Discussion of First Measure on Hardwick's Reform Program.

SUCCESS PREDICTED FOR AUDITOR PROJECT

Renewed Fight on Highway Department Slated to Be Met With Vigorous Opposition.

By MARION KENDRICK.
Presentation of Governor Thomas W. Hardwick's graduated income tax measure and of the general tax act in the house for passage; the chief executive's decision not to order an investigation of the agricultural department, and what it believed will be the decisive fight against the state highway commission, will be the most important features of this week's session of the general assembly.

Despite the fact that the house highway committee rendered unfavorable reports on three measures designed to limit authority of the highway commission, distribute the motor vehicle license funds among the counties on a notional mileage basis, and allow the board fifteen per cent for overhead expenses, the general agricultural committee number two announced Saturday night that it had recommended passage of the Davis bill, containing practically all the provisions of the highway bill.

This announcement came as a surprise to those who have been closely studying the situation and is regarded as a final effort to curtail activities of the highway department, the decisive fight to be made Tuesday or Wednesday when Representative Davis, of Oglethorpe, author of the bill, calls for a vote.

Should this effort fail, it is believed it will mark the end of the fight on the department.

Will Regulate Commission.
"My bill, as amended, will not destroy the highway commission, said Representative Davis Saturday night, "but will regulate its activities and expenditure of the state funds. The measure would allow four per cent of the license fees collected to pay for administration of the law, of the remaining amount, eighty-five per cent would be distributed among the several counties on a post road mileage basis, while fifteen per cent would be allowed the commission for its expenses."

"It isn't true, Mr. Davis," he was asked, "that the authority of the commission would not be final or binding in stating in what manner and where in the respective counties the funds should be expended, should your measure be enacted?"

"No," he replied. "The commission's decision would be final and its right to obtain federal aid funds would not be hindered."

Opponents of the bill maintain, however, that it is so phrased as to give the counties final authority over the highway department practically without any power.

New General Tax Act.
The income tax measure and the new general tax act will now be the centers of debate on the floor of the house. Through the addition of new subjects and increases on the old items, the act—the first to be prepared since 1909—would bring the state approximately $3,000,000, according to Chairman J. W. Culpepper, of the ways and means subcommittee of the appropriations committee.

Advocates of the income tax assert that approximately $4,000,000 would be added to the state's coffers through its operation. In order to obtain immediate funds from taxes on gasoline and soft drinks, Chairman Culpepper is planning to have special bills introduced in the house this week. The method of their operation, he asserted, had not yet been devised by the ways and means committee.

DARING BURGLARS LOOT RESIDENCES AND ROB STORES

Articles Worth Several Thousand Dollars Reported Stolen During Saturday Night.

ONE MAN IS ARRESTED ON HOLDUP CHARGES

Two Automobile Accidents and One Case of Snatch - Thieving Were Reported to Police.

Police were kept busy Saturday night receiving reports of burglaries ranging from the sneak thief variety to large robberies, a total of six instances of thieves getting articles valued at several thousand dollars being reported as having occurred between 10 o'clock and 11 at night. In addition there were two automobile accidents, one case of attempted purse-snatching, one hold-up and a sensational capture of alleged thief by several white girl clerks in the local establishment.

The fact that there were but two automobile accidents reported was considered by police as indicative of a scarcity of the customary Saturday night "moonshine" which they believe is largely responsible for the usual large number of smash-ups invariably occurring on this night.

C. E. Rogers, a resident of Decatur, was accosted by a negro while walking out Butler street about 10 o'clock in the evening, and asked the time.

Loose Watch and Pistol.
Pulling out his watch, he said, to comply with the request, the negro snatched it and jumped aside, preparing to flee. As Mr. Rogers reached for his revolver, the negro anticipated the movement and lunged at him, striking him in the face, and before he could rally from the blow, his revolver was wrested from his grasp. The negro fled with the watch and pistol. A good description was furnished police by the victim.

Charged with complicity in several recent hold-ups, Charlie Rogers, aged 25, a brickmason, who gave his address as 571 Marietta street, was arrested last Saturday night by Policeman Davis and held at headquarters on a blanket charge of suspicion.

J. B. Lynch, aged 42, a machinist, living at 654 Ashby street, was arrested and charged with reckless driving, after his car had struck a negro woman earlier in the evening while driving out Ashby street. The woman was knocked down, and dragged several feet, although she sustained only minor injuries. She was treated at Grady hospital after which she was sent home. Lynch is held in default of $100 bond.

Daring Snatch Thief Case.
A unique instance of purse-snatching resulted in the arrest of J. H. Collins, a painter living at 338 Peachtree street. According to police, a man whose description coincided with that of Collins, sprang to the running board of an automobile belonging to Mrs. W. B. Hayes, of 1 Forest avenue, early in the night, while the car was near the Washington street viaduct, and attempted to snatch the purse of Mrs. Hayes, who was in the car.

The chauffeur speeded up the machine, hurling the would-be robber into the sidewalk, while police were immediately notified and Collins was shortly afterwards arrested near the scene. Collins denies the charge. He is held in default of $1,000 bond.

J. W. Skelton, of Rome, Ga., is being held on a charge of running down and striking a woman on Peachtree early in the evening. The woman's name could not be ascertained, although her condition was said to have been critical. It is thought she was taken to the homes of friends.

Skelton was drunk when arrested, police say. He is charged with being drunk and driving a car while in that condition, in addition to reckless driving. Police are seeking the identity of the woman.

Burglaries Are Reported.
Among the burglaries reported were the following:
The Fair Dry Goods company, 93 Whitehall street, shop entered by cracking a side window by some unknown thief, and a large lot of ladies' tailored suits stolen.

Dixie Magneto company, 183 Walter street, lost a bunch of keys and a number of inexpensive articles, as well as a burglar evidently experienced. No clue was left behind.

Turner's Drug store, 84 Jones avenue, loss of $7 in cash, a package of morphine and a quantity of cigarettes, cigars and tobacco by a thief who effected entrance by removing a pane of glass.

A man named Shieh, of 209 East Tenth street, a number of articles of cloth.

DISARMING PLANS WAIT ON NIPPON

No Reply Yet Received in Washington to Hughes' Explanation of Conference Scope.

Washington, July 16.—Diplomatic preliminaries to the disarmament conference went into a period of quiescence today while Japan deliberated whether to consent to the broad discussion of Far Eastern problems considered essential by this government. If a serious disarmament effort is to be attempted, so far as could be learned, no word had come to the state department tonight in response to the informal explanation made to Japan yesterday relative to the probable scope of the conference.

It was emphasized in official circles that no hasty decision was sought and that there was no desire here to have the Tokyo government accept unreservedly until it had satisfied itself of the exact purposes and good faith of the United States in proposing the conference. The general expectation was that a delay of several days would ensue before the next important development.

Minor Problems.
Meantime those who are to be in charge of the conference began to turn their attention to some of the physical difficulties involved in providing suitable quarters here for so important a gathering. No meeting place has yet been selected, although the suggestion has been made that the Pan-American building probably would provide best facilities available in the national capital.

A question of far greater moment arises from the necessity of providing also living accommodations and office space for the various attending commissions.

It is thought not unlikely that several hotels and apartment houses may have to be taken over to accommodate all the visitors.

It would not occasion surprise here if Great Britain, for instance, sent a delegation of experts and attaches approaching that of some of the nations in Paris during the peace conference. Such a delegation would require a fair sized hotel for its living accommodations as well as a considerable amount of office space.

Many Expected.
Japan is another nation whose commission is expected to be a large one because of the many translators which always are attached to Japanese diplomatic missions.

In addition to the representatives of the six powers who will sit at the council table it is not doubted that many smaller countries, especially the new nations, who are seeking recognition and concessions, will send commissions here in the hope of gaining the ear of the negotiators.

Should the premiers of some of the invited powers, come here as members of the conference, as has been indicated in press dispatches, it is suggested that they be provided private residences as guests of the government. This feature is one which will occupy the active attention of executive officials because of the recommendations that would have to be made to congress for appropriation to defray the expense of such entertainment.

Five Girls Take Part in Capture Of Alleged Thief

Catch Negro and Hold Him Until Police Arrive on the Scene.

Jim McAfee, a negro who told the police he lived in the rear of 223 East Harris street, reckoned without his host Saturday night when it is claimed, he was attempting to whisk a number of articles into his pocket, without paying for the articles themselves nor the war tax.

The incident occurred in a local five and ten cent store.

He was thwarted by the combined efforts of five girl employees, ranging from 15 to 18 years of age. Catching him red-handed in the act, it is said, they held him until the police arrived, despite his frantic efforts to escape.

Great excitement prevailed for a few minutes, and a big crowd was attracted to the scene. Some persons thought it was a hold-up; others believed it was a fire; some thought it was a robbery. The girls did not know just what to think.

Officers McDaniel and Bullard arrived and took away the alleged robber. The girls stated that for three or four nights the man had been entering the store and stealing various articles, from a different section of the store, consequently they were ready for him when he came into the store Saturday.

McAfee is held at police station pending an investigation of his alleged shoplifting.

EFFORTS TO SAVE PASSENGERS FAIL

Over Three Hundred Imperiled as Steamer Is Disabled in St. Lawrence Rapids.

Ogdensburg, N. Y., July 16.—Strenuous efforts were being made tonight to remove 330 passengers from the steamer Rapids King, of the Canada Steamship line, which was disabled in the Long Sault rapids of the St. Lawrence river late today. The craft was disabled by the breaking of a rudder chain. The tiller was used to beach the vessel in seven feet of raging waters. No boats were able to approach the disabled craft because of the swiftness of the current.

An improvised platform was constructed by farmers in an effort to get the passengers ashore, but at a late hour their efforts had not been successful.

When midnight approached all efforts to remove the passengers from the steamer had been unsuccessful. The steamer was said to have a large hole in her hull and the pumps were working steadily.

When the rudder chain broke three men at the wheel narrowly escaped serious injury. A near panic ensued among the crews of the mishap spread among the passengers and it required the united efforts of the crew to quiet them. Most of the passengers are said to be tourists from various parts of this country and Canada.

FEDERAL RESERVE CHIEFS TO MEET

Governors of Five Regional Banks Called to Conference on Cotton Loan Policy.

Washington, July 16.—Governor Harding, of the Federal Reserve board, announced today that he has called a conference here on Tuesday of the governors of the five reserve banks in the great cotton producing sections of the country to adopt a uniform policy on cotton loans during the coming marketing season.

Governors of the reserve banks of Richmond, Dallas, Atlanta, St. Louis and Kansas City have been invited, Mr. Harding said.

The conference, the governor explained, would work out a uniform policy on cotton loans for the orderly marketing of the crop and would issue a statement backed by an announcement by the board, which would set forth the cotton loan policy of the five districts for the season.

Many requests have been received from cotton interests, the governor said, asking the board to make known its policy on cotton loans. The board, he explained, does not make loans, and in order to insure uniformity throughout the cotton sections of the country, it was deemed advisable for representatives of the reserve banks in those districts to meet here and formulate a uniform plan to be followed.

The board, he added, would give its assurances that the policy would be carried out and that the red-counts by the reserve banks would be obtainable.

The governor did not discuss details of the proposed policy, but indicated careful consideration would be given to the terms of cotton paper and the adequacy of security offered for advances.

Hungry and Broke, He Asks for Job To Care for Baby
Stranded, destitute, hungry and shelterless, B. M. Harrison, of Paterson, N. J., Saturday morning sought The Constitution's aid in getting a job. He would do anything, he says, provided it is honest work. He doesn't care about himself so much, he says, but he has a wife and a two-year-old baby to provide for.

He said that his young wife will not accept charity. And rather than ask for help or take advantage of a charitable institution, she had spent two nights on a bench in Grant park.

"I am penniless," he said, "and almost discouraged. But, not quite. I believe that some one will provide a way. If not, I know the Lord will."

He can do any kind of clerical work, he added, but without employment in vain. He says he can find nothing to do.

EMBARGO ON DYES REMAINS IN TARIFF BILL AFTER FIGHT

Combined Attack on Dye Embargo Comes Close to Winning—Final Vote 122 to 102.

TAX ON CRUDE OIL CENTERS HOT FIGHT

Motion to Adjourn Until Monday Temporarily Halts Attack on Tariff on Oils.

Washington, July 16.—After refusing, by a vote of 122 to 102, to eliminate the three-year dye embargo from the Fordney bill the house jumped suddenly today into a partisan fight over oil.

But it did not last long. Flaming fiercely at first, the oil battle ended abruptly on a republican motion to adjourn until Monday. Although opposed by democrats, who forced a roll call, the result was same as yesterday when the republicans, standing together, voted to quit.

By breaking in unexpectedly, Representative Garrett, of Tennessee, in charge of the democratic minority, forced the oil issue to the front. His amendment to put crude petroleum and fuel oil back on a point of order, amid the greatest confusion and uproar. For a time the house did not seem able to get on its feet. Being a member of the committee, he was permitted to present it, but was stopped at the close of a five-minute talk by objections of democrats, who announced they were prepared to shut off debate and vote.

In the hour-hour flurry, the duty was violently opposed and warmly defended. Representative Robertson, republican, of Oklahoma, brought a round of applause from those supporting the oil tariff by attacking "The New England policy of demanding protection with one hand, and an open market Friday."

It was apparent that oil took top place in interest among the house membership in the five contested schedules on which a separate vote is to be permitted by the special rule. Everybody, it seemed, was waiting to speak and work out by the all-day wrangle over dyes, members were ready to lay off until Monday and get their forces lined up for the real fight.

Combined Attack.
The dye embargo stood up against

MERCY OF JURORS SAVES MRS. KABER

Woman Who Plotted the Heartless Murder of Husband to Spend Balance of Life in Prison.

Cleveland, Ohio, July 16.—Through mercy recommended by a jury of men, Mrs. Eva Catherine Kaber, who escaped the electric chair, though found guilty of first degree murder for plotting the assassination of her husband, Daniel F. Kaber.

It was the hope that mercy would be extended by those of the opposite sex which induced her counsel to exclude women jurors on the ground that they are "more cold blooded and mercenary than men." Attempt was made to invalidate panels of tentative jurors because there were women on them, and when women were tentatively seated on the jury they were dismissed by the defense on prearranged challenge.

As a result of the recommendation for mercy, Mrs. Kaber was sentenced to life imprisonment in the Ohio reformatory for women at Marysville by Judge Maurice Bernon. Had the jury not recommended mercy, the court would have been compelled to sentence her to die in the electric chair.

Five Others Accused.
The prison term for Mrs. Kaber was the first final result of the state's effort to bring to justice those responsible for the murder of the Lakewood publisher as he lay in bed.

Indicates That He Has Been Advised the Jurors Will Hear His Charges Against Solicitor.

NOT WORRIED AT ALL, DECLARES BOYKIN

Asserts Chambers Is Exerting Every Effort in Behalf of Floyd Woodward and His Gang.

Aldine Chambers issued a statement Saturday night, indicating that he had been advised that the Fulton county grand jury would hear his charges against Solicitor-General John A. Boykin, August 10, as requested in his last communication to that body.

The Chambers statement declared that he had received a reply from the grand jury "perfectly satisfactory" to him. The statement continued that if Mr. Boykin intended to try the bunco cases he had better proceed at an early date as the time would not be long before he would be disqualified from prosecuting them, clearly indicative of an opinion on the part of Mr. Chambers that the grand jury is considering his charges very seriously.

He further states that the public is not interested in his and Mr. Boykin's fistfighting, but is interested in the charges he has brought against the solicitor-general.

To all of which Mr. Boykin replied Saturday that he did not believe the public was vitally interested in the fistfighting and certainly not in the latest interested in continued slanderous utterances of Mr. Chambers. Mr. Chambers, he declared, is exerting his every effort in behalf of Floyd Woodward and his gang, and the latest communication is simply part of a carefully mapped out propaganda to so divert the solicitor-general's attention to the grand jury charges that he would not be in a position to prosecute the city officials, under indictment, who are soon to be brought to trial.

"This vaporing of Chambers, however, isn't succeeding in its purpose. I am paying no attention to his charges before the grand jury except that I am willing now or at any time to have my entire official career looked into."

ANNEXATION ISSUE IN KIRKWOOD HOT; PETITIONS SIGNED

Kirkwood, Ga., July 16.—(Special.) Two petitions, one favoring annexation of Kirkwood to Atlanta, and the other opposing it, were going the rounds here today, as the result of an open-air meeting Friday night held by the anti and pro people.

Mayor Bryan denied rumors said to be afloat in Atlanta that Kirkwood with its one policeman is "a waste of space," and "a burden," because, he said, "Kirkwood is a peace loving, law-abiding community, without any element that is bound to raise disturbance." Talks also were made by R. J. Davidson, M. S. Johnson and Paul J. Talbot, temporary chairman of the meeting. Additional meetings are held in the future, it is announced.

PAVING IS RUSHED ON SPRING STREET

Much of Big Construction Job Already Completed and Remaining Work Is Being Pushed.

With fine weather prevailing, forces of Fulton county are pushing at top speed the work of widening and repaving Spring street, and are leaving behind them one of the finest smooth boulevards in the south.

From Marietta street north to Baker street, the paving has been finished, and Carnegie Way has been paved from its intersection with Spring to its intersection with North Forsyth. The pavement up to Baker street consists of a concrete base laid over with granite curbs in a cushion of sand, the interstices poured with fine gravel and hot pitch. This is the same type of pavement laid on Whitehall street from Alabama to Mitchell street.

The remaining distance to Peachtree street will be laid with a solid concrete pavement eight inches thick. A little more than a block from North avenue back toward the city has already been laid. At Hunnicutt street, where big fills are necessary, tons of concrete are being poured for the massive retaining walls.

Work Is Rushed.

It is the intention of the county commissioners to complete the street to North avenue by the end of 1921, and given normal weather, they declare they will finish every stroke of the work, including the tremendous amount that will be required on the intersecting streets, bringing them to the proper grade and relaying the pavement.

All preliminary work required of the city has already been laid. At Hunnicutt street, where big fills are necessary, tons of concrete are being poured for the massive retaining walls.

Next year it is the county's intention to pave the remainder of Spring to its northern terminus at Peachtree street. Commissioner Oscar Mills said Saturday that while this matter is yet six months in the future, the county is looking to its beginning, and the end of 1922.

is scheduled to see Spring street a magnificent boulevard from terminus to terminus.

Property Waivers.
Part of the property waivers on the portion between North avenue and Peachtree have been signed by the owners. A strip five feet on each side of the street is being asked of the property owners. This is necessary if regulation with sidewalks are to parallel the thoroughfare. Failure to get the requisite waivers would not halt the work, however, since the present sidewalks would simply be utilized as they were on the Marietta street end, which permitted widening the street to sixty feet without touching private property.

When Spring street is completed and the Spring street viaduct is erected, Atlanta will have a cross-town thoroughfare surpassed by no drive in the south.

VALUABLE RING LOST BY GOLFER FOUND BY CADDY

It is not often that a man recovers a piece of valuable jewelry after having been lost on a golf course for several years. However, a story has come to light wherein a caddy in his search for stray golf balls in the "rough" found a valuable ring and returned it to its owner.

Seven years ago, A. E. Harless, a charter member of the Druid Hills Golf club, was playing on the course and lost a Scottish Ring, valued at about $700. On July 4, Milton Bell and E. A. Banker were on the same course and their caddy found the ring near the eleventh hole. Mr. Harless was notified and the caddy is now wearing entire new outfit of clothes as a reward.

FRIENDS SAY HUFF WILL RUN FOR MAYOR

Friends close to Dr. L. N. Huff, well-known politician and former candidate for mayor, stated Saturday that he will again become a candidate for mayor in 1922. Dr. Huff declined to confirm these statements, but he would not deny them, merely replying that he would probably have something interesting to say later. He was twice defeated for mayor and was later unsuccessful in the race for Fulton county representative in the legislature.

Mr. Adams, who has served as president for four years, has just been re-elected for another term of two years. He has been connected with the railway mail service for more than fifteen years, and is one of the most popular men in the fourth division. His run is from Atlanta to Charlotte, where he is clerk in charge of the R. O. P. He lives in this city, at 17 West End place. He and his wife are working hard to make the meeting here a splendid success. Mrs. Adams heading a committee from the auxiliary to look after entertainment of ladies.

Among other business to be transacted by the meeting will be the counting of ballots, already cast by referendum, and declaring the winners in the election of four delegates to the national meeting in St. Paul next September. Mr. Adams will go to this meeting as a delegate by virtue of his local office. National officers have also been voted upon by referendum, and that result will be declared here Wednesday.

ADAMS WILL AGAIN HEAD MAIL CLERKS

Fourth Division of Railway Association to Meet in Atlanta on July 20.

With about 300 delegates in attendance, the biennial session of the fourth division of the Railway Mail association will meet Wednesday for a one-day session in the assembly room of the Ansley hotel.

In the evening a banquet will be served at 7:30, after which a two-day session will be held at the hotel.

The fact that the criminal division for Judge John D. Humphries, has been unable to dispose of the cases before it has made many believe that the procedure might be necessary. On the other hand, there are those who think that the present wave of criminal cases has reached its height and will rapidly decrease within a few months.

Solicitor-General John A. Boykin pointed out Saturday the great growth in business in that court since 1917. In 1917, he said, the court handled only 752 felony cases, while up to July 1, 1921, for six months of this year, more than 1,000 cases have been disposed of in the criminal division. He also said that the court not had enough cases to make it run steadily until the first of 1922.

In addition to this Mr. Boykin pointed out that the court had been forced to call upon other judges for assistance in managing its affairs, and that it had run practically without cessation since the beginning of the year. Judge W. C. Worrell, of Cuthbert, will sit on the bench for Judge Humphries during the next week.

Oscar Mills, former chairman of the county commissioners and now a member of that board, said Saturday that he did not believe it would be necessary to create another criminal division. He said that the present number of cases in court was abnormal and would soon drop back to normal. He said that the county could not afford such an added expense.

"The courthouse now," he said, "with its subsidiaries is putting the county on the brink of financial embarrassment and the county certainly can not afford any additional expenses—especially when it is entirely possible to handle the criminal cases through co-operation of the civil division."

If such a division were created, it would be done through an act by the general assembly.

PLACED UNDER ARREST
AS COUNTERFEITER

Secret service operatives returning to district headquarters in Atlanta Saturday announced the capture of Charlie Webb, a young alleged counterfeiter who has been sought by federal authorities for several weeks. It is alleged that he raised $11 bills to five and ten.

The alleged offense was committed in Heard county, Georgia, and Randolph county, Alabama. Webb was captured Friday night in a big swamp 12 miles from Tifton, where he had taken refuge. He was put in jail at Albany and later will be brought to Atlanta for trial.

ROTARIANS TO HOLD MEETING ON TUESDAY

A fine program has been arranged for the meeting of the Rotary club at the Piedmont hotel next Tuesday, July 19, at 1 o'clock. The program will include several unique features.

Chamber Head Improves.
Macon, Ga., July 16.—(Special.)—E. W. Burke, prominent business man and president of the chamber of commerce, is improving at the Macon hospital, where he has been confined for several days. Physicians say that his condition is not serious.

New Criminal Court Division Now Discussed

Increase in Crime Forced Fulton to Call for Judges Outside County.

Discussion is now prevalent in courthouse circles over the advisability of legislative action looking to the creation of a new criminal division of Fulton superior court, in order to handle efficiently the great rush of business that section of the court has been experiencing for months past.

The fact that the criminal division for Judge John D. Humphries, has been unable to dispose of the cases before it has made many believe that the procedure might be necessary. On the other hand, there are those who think that the present wave of criminal cases has reached its height and will rapidly decrease within a few months.

Solicitor-General John A. Boykin pointed out Saturday the great growth in business in that court since 1917. In 1917, he said, the court handled only 752 felony cases, while up to July 1, 1921, for six months of this year, more than 1,000 cases have been disposed of in the criminal division. He also said that the court not had enough cases to make it run steadily until the first of 1922.

In addition to this Mr. Boykin pointed out that the court had been forced to call upon other judges for assistance in managing its affairs, and that it had run practically without cessation since the beginning of the year. Judge W. C. Worrell, of Cuthbert, will sit on the bench for Judge Humphries during the next week.

Oscar Mills, former chairman of the county commissioners and now a member of that board, said Saturday that he did not believe it would be necessary to create another criminal division. He said that the present number of cases in court was abnormal and would soon drop back to normal. He said that the county could not afford such an added expense.

"The courthouse now," he said, "with its subsidiaries is putting the county on the brink of financial embarrassment and the county certainly can not afford any additional expenses—especially when it is entirely possible to handle the criminal cases through co-operation of the civil division."

If such a division were created, it would be done through an act by the general assembly.

PLACED UNDER ARREST
AS COUNTERFEITER

Secret service operatives returning to district headquarters in Atlanta Saturday announced the capture of Charlie Webb, a young alleged counterfeiter who has been sought by federal authorities for several weeks. It is alleged that he raised $11 bills to five and ten.

The alleged offense was committed in Heard county, Georgia, and Randolph county, Alabama. Webb was captured Friday night in a big swamp 12 miles from Tifton, where he had taken refuge. He was put in jail at Albany and later will be brought to Atlanta for trial.

HUDSON DENIES ALLEGED GUILT IN DEATH OF BOYS

Macon, Ga., July 16.—(Special.)—Glen Moore Hudson, held for safe keeping in jail here following an alleged confession by his wife Friday, charging him with murdering her two young children, Robert and Isaiah Temple, Tuesday, has made no statement other than to deny charges contained in the alleged confession by his wife.

After the killing had been reported Tuesday by the stepfather, the man was placed in jail in Albany, charged with murder. The mother was held as a material witness. The following day, however, she was charged with complicity in the killing. In the confession attributed to her Friday, she said to have declared that she had kept silent until then because of fear that her husband would kill her, or that some of his relatives would if he were placed where he could not.

The bodies of the children were found on the porch of the home with the stepfather's pistol beside them. The children had apparently been shot to death while cutting a watermelon.

The mother of the boys is said to have stated in her confession that the children were murdered at about 9 o'clock Tuesday morning. She said that her husband compelled her to go across the road from their home while he went in the house, and that shortly afterward she heard pistol shots. She accused him of killing the boys, according to the confession she is alleged to have made, and then, it was stated, replied that if she told he would kill her or have her killed.

DANCE HALL ZONE PLANNED FOR CITY

Councilman Fred Woodall Will Seek to Limit Operation of Halls and to Increase License Cost.

Operation of dance halls and dancing schools will be restricted to a limited zone in the center of the city and the present license of $60 yearly will be increased to $100, if the general council Monday afternoon adopts an ordinance which will be introduced by Councilman Fred O. Woodall, of the third ward.

Passage of the ordinance would make it unlawful for dance halls to be located at the corner of Peachtree and Cain streets; Scroggie on East Pine street; and a number of other dance halls and academies for dancing to remain open.

The dance hall zone which Mr. Woodall proposes is as follows: Beginning at the corner of Peachtree and North Forsyth streets, at the corner of West Mitchell street; thence east along West Mitchell and East Mitchell to Central avenue; thence north along Central avenue to Deatur street; thence diagonally across Deatur street to Ivy street; thence north along Ivy street to Auburn avenue; thence west along Auburn avenue to Pryor street; thence north along Pryor to Houston; thence west along Houston to Peachtree; thence south along Peachtree to James and thence west along James to the starting point.

"Dance Halls Defined." The ordinance means "any place, room or enclosure where the public is permitted to dance and a fee is charged to the male or to the female and it is not applicable to dances held at private places or other places where no fee is charged for the parties who use the floor."

At present all dance halls are classified and licensed under the caption of dancing schools, but Mr. Woodall has separated them and will introduce an ordinance to cover each.

The councilman declares that the moral atmosphere of most dance halls has anything but an elevating influence on the young boys and girls who attend them, and their operation should be restricted to a zone where more rigid police supervision is possible.

The text of the dance hall ordinance, which is identical in substance with the dancing school and academy ordinance, is as follows:

Dance Hall Ordinance.
Section 1. The following is hereby ordained as being the limits within which dance halls may be operated and licensed and without which dance halls shall not be operated and licensed, to-wit: beginning at the corner of James street and North Forsyth street and running south along North Forsyth and South Forsyth streets to West Mitchell street; thence east along West Mitchell and East Mitchell to Central avenue; thence north along Central avenue to Deatur street; thence diagonally across Deatur street to Ivy street; thence north along Ivy street to Auburn avenue; thence west along Auburn avenue to Pryor street; thence north along Pryor to Houston; thence west along Houston to Peachtree; thence south along Peachtree to James and thence west along James to the starting point.

Immediate Bonus Is Not Endorsed By Rainbow Vets

Cleveland, Ohio, July 16.—The Rainbow Division Veterans association failed to endorse an immediate cash bonus for former soldiers at the closing session of their annual convention here today. A resolution was adopted, however, recommending early collection of the accrued interest on the allied war debt to the United States, and the use of the money to pay the adjusted compensation for ex-soldiers.

The resolution pointed out that the allied debt to the United States amounts to $10,000,000, and that $1,500,000,000 are due as accrued interest.

The bonus resolution, reported out of committee after two days' discussion, took into consideration that the closing session of their annual convention here today. A resolution was adopted, however, recommending early collection of the accrued interest on the allied war debt to the United States, and the use of the money to pay the adjusted compensation for ex-soldiers.

Colonel George R. Leach, former commanding officer of the 151st field artillery, now mayor of Minneapolis, was selected president for the ensuing year. Other officers elected were:

Honorary president, Matt A. Tinley, Council Bluffs, Iowa; first vice president, J. Bentley Mulford, Washington, D. C.; chairman, Rev. J. J. Halliday, Detroit; historian, Colonel W. B. Wolfe, of Chicago.

The secretary-treasurer will be named by the president.

The next annual convention will be held in Minneapolis, July 14 and 15.

At the close of the business session the delegates stood for twenty seconds in silence as a tribute to the dead of the division.

SPANIARDS AND SWISS IN TARIFF AGREEMENT

Madrid, July 16.—The Spanish and the Swiss governments have reached a temporary commercial agreement under which Swiss merchandise will enter Spain under the minimum tariff while Spain will enjoy the privilege of the most favored nation clause for goods sent to Switzerland. The agreement may be terminated at a moment's notice.

U. S. Pays Britain For Transporting Troops to France

Despite Huge Debt of Britain, U. S. Pays $32,628,352 for Shipping Claim.

Washington, July 16.—Despite Great Britain's debt of four billion, five hundred million dollars to this country, payment of $32,628,352 has been made by the American government to the British ministry of shipping in settlement of a claim against the war department, treasury officials said today.

The British claim was for transportation services arising out of the war with Germany, and the payment, it was explained, constitutes a final settlement between the war department and the British ministry of shipping of all claims of either party against the other for transportation services.

Secretary Mellon asked Mr. Daugherty for a ruling as to whether the act of March 3, 1915, which requires the secretary to withhold payment of any judgment against the United States where the claimant is indebted to this country in any manner, applied to such a claim.

Mr. Daugherty held the act did not apply as it was not the practice of sovereign nations to prosecute their claims against one another in the courts and obtain judgment, but adjust such matters through diplomatic channels.

"It should be construed to apply to a case such as is now presented," the attorney general said, "then whenever a claim is allowed by the United States in favor of a foreign nation it will be the duty of the secretary of the treasury to make payments to withhold the amount of any claim which the United States may have against such nation, as is well known, this government exercises a broad discretion in determining what claims it will present against other nations and that the operations of the statute in such matters would seriously interfere with the government in the conduct of foreign relations."

Current Expenses.
The British transportation claim, it was explained, was for what was regarded during the war as current expenses. Among the items it was said, there was a general understanding that all current expenses would be paid one another without awaiting the settlement of international debts.

In connection with the claim Mr. Mellon also inquired whether $12,275,711 should be withheld, pending adjustment of a claim of the shipping board against the ministry of oil. The attorney general suggested that such a step might be suggested to Great Britain through the usual diplomatic channels but the treasury decided, officials said, that the amount of the shipping board's bill was yet to be adjusted finally and that the British transportation claim therefore should be paid in full.

BERGDOLL HEARINGS TO REOPEN TUESDAY

Washington, July 16.—The house committee investigating the escape of Grover Cleveland Bergdoll, Philadelphia draft dodger, decided today to reopen hearings Tuesday, but Chairman Peters declined to indicate the new line of inquiry to be followed.

SILENCE SCREENS IRISH PEACE MEET

London, July 16.—(By the Associated Press.)—What is happening behind the scenes in the consultations of the Irish parties preliminary to the renewal of the conversations between Eamon de Valera and Premier Lloyd-George on Monday is suggested by what Sir James Craig, the Ulster premier, termed this morning "a rigid silence."

Sir James used this phrase in explaining to interviewers his belief that everything depended upon the way the question was handled. "The slightest indiscretion or misinterpretation," he said, "might easily cause incalculable harm. What will best aid the attainment of peace is for everyone concerned to withhold comment outside of official consultations."

Of the principals in the conference, Mr. Lloyd-George is spending the week-end in his country home at Chequers Court, where members of the cabinet probably will be called to assist him in his re-study of the delicate position.

While Mr. de Valera and his colleagues wait this afternoon to see the exhibition here of Sir John Lavery's paintings which include portraits of the late Sir Roger Casement and of the funeral procession in London of Lord Mayor MacSwiney of Cork, and a portrait of Archbishop Mannix of Australia.

Sir James Craig was awaiting the arrival in London of three members of the Ulster cabinet, H. M. Pollock, minister of agriculture, and U. A. Andrews, minister of labor, who are expected to be held this evening.

On the deliberations of the Ulster premier and his colleagues is believed to rest the immediate hope for the unembarrassed continuance of the Downing street conversations in which it is possible Sir James will join Monday, although such a visit to the prime minister's official residence would merely be for the purpose of an interview with Mr. Lloyd-George.

The de Valera headquarters were bombarded with telegrams and requests for comment on various published reports as to terms, concrete proposals and decisions alleged to have been made during the talks on the peace question already held, but to all inquiries the official rejoinder was "we are pledged to secrecy. These reports are pure fabrications, out of the minds of their writers, and are wholly unwarranted."

SENATORS AGREE TO AMENDMENT ON SWEET BILL

Washington, July 16.—Progress made by the senate finance committee today in the consideration of the sub-committee report on the Sweet bill to consolidate under one bureau government agencies dealing with former service men. The committee agreed to the most important amendment suggested by the sub-committee, which would place the veterans bureau directly under the president.

Efforts are being made by the committee to report the bill out Monday or Tuesday. For this reason, a decision was reached today to postpone hearings on the bill for refunding allied debts, previously set for Monday and at which Secretary Mellon was to appear.

ATLANTA MAY LOOK FOR THUNDERSHOWERS

With the dust of the city settled by Saturday afternoon showers, Atlanta and vicinity are destined for a slightly more pleasant than the past few days, according to the weather man. His prediction for Sunday is that the day will be fair for the most part interspersed with cloudy spells and possibly a thunder shower of two.

German Officers Get Four Years For War Crimes

Two Lieutenants Guilty of Firing on Lifeboats of Torpedoed Hospital Ship.

Leipzig, Germany, July 16.—(By the Associated Press.)—Lieutenant Dittmar and Lieutenant Boldt, German, charged with murder in the first degree for firing on lifeboats after the Canadian hospital ship Llandovery Castle had been torpedoed on the morning of 1914, were each sentenced today to four years imprisonment.

The sentence did not, however, carry hard labor with it, as demanded by the public prosecutor. The case of Dittmar and Boldt differed from the others, which had been heard by the supreme court here in connection with trials growing out of violations of rules of civilized warfare, inasmuch as the two lieutenants were brought to trial by the German public prosecutor. Great Britain only had demanded the trial of Commander Faisig of the submarine which torpedoed the Llandovery Castle, who fled the country.

The public prosecutor, however, after an examination of the evidence, ordered that Dittmar and Boldt be placed on trial.

Lieutenant Boldt, who a short time ago retired from the navy, was ordered deprived of his civil rights.

"Acted on Impulse."
The men were sentenced for manslaughter in the first degree on the ground that the "officers acted on the impulse of the moment."

An excited crowd filled the courtroom today. Many women and numerous friends of the prisoners were present. The accused officers looked more cheerful than at any previous time in their trial, but their appearances changed when the sentences were pronounced.

Dr. Schmidt, president of the supreme court, which is trying German accused of violations of civilized warfare, in reviewing the case, declared that the Llandovery Castle was torpedoed against the law of nations.

"Everything aboard was in perfect order," he said, "and further more the sinking was against all regulations of the German admiralty, as the ship was waters where the torpedoing was forbidden."

Firing Intentional.
At least three life boats got clear. There was no reason why all could not have been picked up. All three must have been abandoned when the submarine began firing and two of them must have been hit.

The court finds these boats were fired on intentionally with the object of removing witnesses who could testify to the misdeed by the submarine commander.

"The court finds that both of the accused took part in the firing and in the effort to cover up the deed; therefore, both share Commander Faisig's responsibility."

more, the court finds the officers acted on the impulse of the moment, that the deed was not premeditated; consequently, they are not guilty of murder. They would have done their duty if it had not been for the orders of the submarine commander to fire on the lifeboats and would have been excused for refusing to comply with the commander's demand to maintain secrecy.

"This terrible case casts a shadow over the German navy and the whole submarine war."

There was some commotion in the courtroom after the verdict was announced, but the police locked the doors and prevented demonstrations by the crowds which had gathered outside.

LEGION TO RENEW FIGHT FOR BONUS, DECLARES EMERY

Chicago, July 16.—The fight of the American Legion for the soldiers' bonus will be continued with renewed vigor, declared Major John G. Emery, of Grand Rapids, Mich., national commander of the legion, today in a statement on the "side-tracking" of the bonus bill in the senate.

"I consider President Harding all wrong in his attitude," he said. "Why, the senate finance committee in its report declared untrue the claims that the Sweet bill and the adjusted compensation program would bankrupt the treasury."

Major Emery asserted the legion has a well-defined program to fight for the bonus and this will not be modified.

"There was at first considerable opposition in the legion itself to this program, but this has now subsided," he said. "Wherever it existed, it was on the part of men well off financially. We have now induced the men to devote their shares in the compensation to the men who need it. There are now several millions among the strongest supporters of the program. The wounded and disabled men will be taken care of first and then will come those in financial straits due to the war."

"The country, as a whole, is with us in this," he stated, "only Washington, the banks and the associations of commerce are against our program."

AIR MAIL PILOT KILLED IN FALL

San Francisco, July 16.—Howard Smith, an air mail pilot, was killed today, near Marina, when his airplane fell three hundred feet as he started on his regular trip to Reno.

The plane went into a nose dive, apparently because of engine trouble, observers said, and burst into flames as it struck the ground. Smith's body was burned beyond recognition. Smith was 35 years of age. He transferred here recently from the Chicago division of the air mail service.

WAS MISQUOTED ON GRAFT TALK, STATES WALLIS

New York, July 16.—Immigration Commissioner Frederick C. Wallis today declared that he had been misquoted in the newspapers regarding graft at Ellis Island.

"There is graft there," he said, "but it is small and not widespread. The statements credited to me that graft amounts to $500,000, are ridiculous. I believe the employees as a whole are honest and true as steel."

He added that he had no way of estimating the amount of graft collected from aliens, but that most of it went to persons who had no official connection with Ellis Island.

He declared that graft had been going on at the island for years and that he was taking all steps possible to apprehend the guilty parties, place.

GERMAN COMMISSION IN SILESIA ENDED
Berlin, July 16.—The German plebiscite commission in upper Silesia has been dissolved, says a dispatch from Breslau, Prussian Silesia, to a local agency. German interest in the plebiscite zone hereafter are to be represented by a "people's council," comprising members of various German political parties and civic organizations, under the chairmanship of Dr. Lukatschek.

Vorwarts declares that 40,000 German civilians have left upper Silesia for interior Germany since the resumption of railroad traffic in the area where the recent uprisings of Polish insurgents took place.

Leading Counsel For Mrs. Stillman Dangerously Ill

Yonkers, N. Y., July 16.—John F. Bronner, chief counsel for Mrs. Anne U. Stillman, in the divorce action brought by her husband, James A. Stillman, New York banker, is suffering from pneumonia, and will be confined to his bed for more than a month, it was said tonight after a conference of physicians at his home here. He is 70 years old.

Grave fears are felt by close associates of the attorney because of his advanced years, although the physicians' announcement said his chances of recovery were favorable. His illness will delay further hearings in the Stillman case, which were set for July 27. It is now thought the case will not be resumed before September.

ITALIAN CHAMBER TO MEET MONDAY

Rome, July 16.—The Italian chamber will reconvene Monday and the new ministry will outline its policy, on which a vote will be taken, giving an indication of the strength of the new premier, Signor Bonomi, the premier will deal chiefly with the problem of restoring state authority, especially with reference to the suppression of the struggles between the communists and the fascists.

Signor Bonomi has held daily conference with the leaders of both sides in an endeavor to find a plan for the cessation of hostilities. The government will clear up the financial problem, outlining plans for the restoration of the country's credit and also plans for unemployment, in addition to introducing a measure providing for simplification of the state's cumbersome bureaucracy.

The foreign policy will be indicated, and it is expected to contrast with the policy of renunciation with which Count Stora was charged. In the matter of a vote of confidence, the government is likely to get a modest majority, being opposed only by the parties of the right, the nationalists, fascists and Agrarians, amounting to about one hundred votes.

The premier will ask for a five months provisional budget. About the beginning of August parliament will adjourn until November.

LEAGUE AT WORK ON DISARMAMENT

Continues Studies Believing There Will Be No Conflict With Proposed Washington Conference.

Paris, July 16.—(By the Associated Press.)—The league of nations is going ahead with its work in connection with the disarmament of the theory that it will in no wise interfere with the proposed conference on limitation of armaments in Washington and that it may develop information which would be of use to such a conference.

That was the declaration announced at the opening session today of the temporary mixed commission for the reduction of armaments, appointed by the league, which was presided over by Rene Viviani, of France, chairman of the commission.

M. Viviani, H. A. L. Fisher, the British representative; Senator Carlo Schanzer, of Italy, and the delegates of the leading nations represented on the commission were agreed on this and also were in accord in praise of President Harding's initiative in proposing a conference on armaments. They declared the league could not but welcome joyfully all deliberations having in view a solution of the delicate and complex general question which the league was studying objectively.

Brief exchanges of views this morning showed the delegates were impressed with the necessity of proceeding prudently with the question by easy stages since it is impossible not to take into account the special situation of certain countries and the absence of Russia and Germany from the league. The commission will first make a general survey of the situation as set forth by data gathered by the league's consultative military and naval commission and appoint subcommittees to take up special branches of the subject.

Viviani Comments.
The tendency in French circles to consider the league's disarmament commission useless in view of the proposed Washington conference was deprecated by the argument that the commission's work in no way prejudices what any other deliberative body may do. The suggestion was made that M. Viviani's work on the commission would make him a likely representative of France in Washington in case Premier Briand should be unable to go.

M. Viviani, in his address opening the sessions, after reviewing the history of the creation of the commission, said:

"After indicating my conception of how we would proceed in our mission, I feel no hesitation in commenting on the great and noble initiative taken by President Harding a few days ago. We have not been surprised that the head of the great American nation, so powerful and so generous and which has so often discussed the question of disarmament, should have taken the lead in assembling the various governments for the purpose of reaching agreements. We would be the first to congratulate such action and we are happy to greet this step. We are glad to be associated in it, certain that the work we are going to prepare cannot but be taken into consideration by the governments when we ourselves shall be gathered next September before the disarmament conference. I do not say they will be definite but they will be precise."

Difficult Problem.
"I may add that the question of disarmament is so difficult, complex and delicate that those who discuss it must meet with preconceived notions, ignorance and prejudices, and must overcome traditions and economic difficulties. There cannot be too many of us who wish to concern ourselves with this problem, to appeal to public opinion and to prepare the world for this question, that should be solved and definitely solved."

"Such is the spirit in which we must work, and truly it would not have been worth while to have suffered the atrocious war if we could not draw fruitful lessons from the sacrifices of our sons."

Mr. Fisher, in an address approving M. Viviani's statement, said:

"If the Washington conference should, as must be hoped, reach an agreement, that agreement certainly would be in conformity with Article 21 of the covenant of the league. This commission also should express great satisfaction with the action taken by President Harding which, far from being in opposition to the general idea of the league, is, on the contrary, in full conformity with its spirit."

Would Separate Arms.
He suggested that naval disarmament might be considered separately.

Above: Officers of the Emory unit gathered around Colonel E. C. Davis, the commanding officer. In the middle picture is a group of the Emory unit-nurses, while below are members of the unit enjoying the barbecue. They are Dr. C. W. Strickler, Miss Johnson, Dr. Frank Boland and Miss Wood.

Members of Emory unit or the soldiers of Base Hospital No. 43, as they were known in France, held their second annual reunion yesterday and decided to remain a compact and enduring organization both for service and for pleasure.

A big barbecue was served at the farm of Dr. E. C. Davis, who organized and commanded the unit "overseas." It was a barbecue worth attending, too, being served in a shady grove and prepared by the best experts in Fulton county. More than a hundred members of the unit attended. The list of those present included most of the officers, many of the nurses and a fine percentage of the enlisted personnel.

After the guests had done justice to the cue, there was a brief business meeting. At this meeting Dr. Boland called attention to overtures made through the American Red Cross for complete army hospital equipment, which would be turned over to the unit in time of war or great national stress. He said he felt the commission would willingly welcome the hope expressed at Washington that a solution of the naval disarmament problem might be reached.

"As to land disarmament," Mr. Fisher added, "it will be useful to emphasize that as long as Germany and Russia remain outside of the league and as long as one is uncertain of Germany's good faith, it will be very difficult to accomplish practical results. It is necessary that we show ourselves very prudent."

In the commission six naval, military and aerial experts represent Japan, Spain, Brazil, France, Italy and Great Britain—there are two economic experts from Rumania and Italy but the latter did not attend today's meeting; two financial experts from India and Belgium; three representatives of the International Labor bureau; Leon Jouhaux, of France; Yan Ouregeest, of Holland; and M. Thorberg, of Sweden; three representatives of Czechoslovakia, Denmark and Canada. The last named was not present today.

Article 21 of the covenant of the league, referred to by Mr. Fisher, reads: "Nothing in this covenant shall be deemed to affect the validity of international engagements such as treaties of arbitration or regional understandings like the Monroe doctrine, for securing the maintenance of peace."

Anderson, S. C., July 16.—The four men and boy arrested yesterday after a coroner's inquest into the killing of U. F. Hamey and Thomas Hays in a shooting affray at Hamey's home, near here, were released on bond today.

The killing was said to have followed receipt by Hamey and his brother-in-law of a miniature coffin containing a note advising them to leave the county.

GERMAN SHIPS, SEIZED IN WAR, AWARDED PERU

Paris, July 16.—The reparations commission, after hearing the arguments today of the Peruvian delegate, Commander Aubry, unanimously decided that the German ships seized by Peru during the world war belong to that country. As a consequence, the commission decided the allies have no right of requisition over the vessels.

Union Pays Costs.
The cost of his legal defense was being paid, the witness said, by the United Mine Workers.

Denial that any of the $2,500,000 spent by the National Miners' union, in connection with the Mingo, W. Va., coal strike troubles, went for arms was made before the senate investigating committee by C. F. Keeney, of Kenyon county, which was under cross-examination by Mr. Avis. The money was spent, Keeney insisted, to support tent colonies in which eleven thousand miners and their families were housed.

James Kirkpatrick, a deputy, testified that he had received a salary from the union as well as his official pay, and named a half dozen men he said the coal operators employed. The system no longer was in effect, he said.

Six Await Trial.
There were thirteen men in the Mingo party, Hatfield said, and seven were killed. He explained that he was acquitted of one homicide charge, but that "six more are awaiting trial."

"I asked the mayor for warrants," Hatfield explained, "because they were violating the town ordinance by carrying guns. We had been informed that the warrants for throwing these things out of their houses were illegal."

S. B. Avis, counsel for the operators, asked Hatfield if he had not been "instrumental in bringing in rifles in which eleven thousand witnesses said he was now running a store which sold guns."

Hatfield added.

Will Decide Fate Of S. S. Leviathan Within One Month

Giant Liner May Be Refitted to Form Nucleus of Fast American Fleet.

New York, July 16.—The giant liner Leviathan, which has been idle at her pier in Hoboken for two years costing the taxpayers $45,000 a month for upkeep, will be ordered reconditioned, salvaged or sold within the next month. This was announced today by Chairman Lasker of the shipping board after he had spent several hours inspecting the former German liner Vaterland, which was seized during the war and converted into an American troop ship.

If it is decided to refit the 54,000-ton steamer and put her on the seas again as a first class passenger liner, the cost probably would be twelve million dollars, experts told Mr. Lasker. She would be converted into an oil burner and made ready for service by February, 1922. The cost of building and fitting a ship of the same size today would cost in the neighborhood of thirty million dollars. It was estimated.

In Good Condition.
Mr. Lasker, who was accompanied on his trip of inspection by a number of shipping board and steamship officials, said the steamer was in good condition and moored in deep water. The machinery was in perfect order, and if necessary, she could put to sea in 24 hours.

Mr. Lasker said the expense of more than a half million dollars a year for a crew of one hundred, and upkeep was necessary to keep the liner in good condition. It costs one hundred thousand dollars annually for fifty seven fire guards to patrol the steamer every hour of the day and night. Sixty draughtsmen are employed making plans for refitting in order that time may be saved if it is decided to recondition the steamer.

P. A. S. Franklin, president of the International Merchant Marine, who was a member of the inspecting party, said his corporation had an agreement with the shipping board to operate the Leviathan for five years, if the government decided upon reconditioning her.

Under American Flag.
Asked if this meant that the steamer would fly the British flag, Mr. Franklin said it most emphatically does not. It will be under the American flag and the nucleus of a fast American mail service.

Mr. Lasker, when asked if the shipping board had a complete title to the vessel, said "while we have not yet settled with Germany for her, I believe that is a matter easily overcome."

Discussing the shipping situation, Mr. Lasker said the shipping board came in we inherited what is the greatest commercial wreck of all times.

The shipping board has "assets" which we find to be mostly liabilities. The chief among these are wooden ships costing the government $450,000,000 of the taxpayers' money, which have either to be sold, salvaged or sunk by or before October 1st of this year. If the worst comes to the worst, they will make ideal airplane targets.

"Next on the list comes this Leviathan. A decision must be made in thirty days or sooner because of the necessity of starting work on the decorative plans."

To Dismiss Cases Of Men Charged In Cronkite Death

Washington, July 16.—All federal proceedings against Captain Robert Rosenbluth, of New York, and Sergeant Roland Potlauer, of Providence, R. I., in connection with the shooting of Major Alexander Cronkite at Camp Lewis, Washington, in October, 1918, are to be dismissed, it was announced today by Attorney-General Daugherty, who made a personal investigation of the case.

Mr. Daugherty said that "all the evidence procured by the department with the names of all witnesses who have any material knowledge of the case, shall be sent to the prosecuting attorney for Pierce county, Wash., for such action as he deems proper."

Negro Tells Story Of Postmaster's Death, According to Police

Petersburg, Va., July 16.—Raleigh Haskins, a negro, confessed here today, according to officers, that he and Judge Griffith, another negro, murdered Stephen G. White, postmaster at Harper's Home, Dinwiddie county, Thursday.

Griffith denied, officers said, that he had a hand in the killing, but said that he was present when Haskins beat the old man to death with a brick and cut his throat.

Haskins made his confession to Sheriff Bolser, of Dinwiddie county, and to Assistant Prosecutor Goode, of Dinwiddie.

JAP CROWN PRINCE RECEIVED BY POPE

Rome, July 16.—Crown Prince Hirohito, of Japan, after visiting the principal historical churches of the morning, called at the Vatican in the afternoon and had a cordial interview with Pope Benedict with whom he exchanged presents.

The crown prince told the pontiff that Emperor Yoshiro had entrusted him with the mission of conveying to the pope his greetings and wishes for a long and prosperous reign. Pope Benedict replied that he was much gratified by the cordial expression.

Later, on behalf of the pontiff, Cardinal Gasparri, papal secretary of state, made a return visit to the crown prince in Altieri palace.

False Tax Return Recoveries Bring Huge Sum to U.S.

Washington, July 16.—Approximately twenty million dollars was added to the government's revenues during the fiscal year just ended through recoveries from false and fraudulent income tax returns, Commissioner Blair announced today.

Indictments have been returned during the year in every section of the country, he said, and many jail sentences have been imposed, ranging from sixty days to a year, in addition to the fines and penalties which were also assessed.

"Fraud upon the revenue by way of filing false and fraudulent tax returns appears in many unique ways," Mr. Blair said. "Some taxpayers are extremely crude in their methods, and reduce their taxes by merely omitting large items of income from their returns. Thus, in one instance a prominent merchant in one of our larger cities owned and operated two stores. For three years straight he omitted entirely from his returns the income of one of the two stores."

"In another instance a prominent man received approximately one-half of his income as salary from a corporation of which he was president, and of which corporation he owned practically all of the stock. The corporation took this salary as a deduction and a necessary expense; the man himself entirely omitted to report this salary, never thinking that the corporation's return would be checked against his individual return."

"Manipulations of inventory are not infrequently found, and these can always be checked accurately by the physical examination of the bureau, as no business of any size can keep accurate books and at the same time manipulate inventories. Some taxpayers evidently are of the belief that they can hire unscrupulous accountants who reconstruct their books, and then if the fraud is discovered blame it all on the accountants, to whom they usually pay large fees. In many instances field examiners have discovered that taxpayers keep two sets of books, one set accurately setting forth the status of the business, and the other set fraudulently setting forth their income and merely kept for the purpose of defrauding the government. It is safe to say that in nine out of ten of these latter cases the fraud is discovered within a short time after it is perpetrated."

KILLING HUSBAND, WOMAN ENDS LIFE

Double Tragedy Follows

da City—Dead Couple Couple Well Known.

BUSINESS IMPROVING SAYS FINANCIER RYAN

New York, July 16.—Optimistic views regarding business conditions were expressed by Thomas F. Ryan, financier, when he left for Europe today on the Olympic. He said determination and co-operation would help restore prosperity much sooner than most people think. His statement follows:

"I feel confident that business conditions all over the world, with few exceptions, are slowly improving."

"In this country, orderly, but persistent liquidation has been going on for many months. Merchants are buying only what they can sell for cash. Consumers have had to listen to so much pessimistic talk because they have been expecting still further reductions in prices that they are buying only what is absolutely necessary for their daily wants. People everywhere have been scared. They are getting over that. The people of this country are the greatest consumers of food and manufactured products in the world in normal times and normal times are slowly coming back."

"While the labor question is a difficult one there are many signs which show that union, as honestly willing and trying to do their part in the readjustment which is going on, I hope the standard of living and pay of the workman will never reach the low level of the past. To force that would be a very bad thing for everybody."

"Evils created by a disastrous war cannot be corrected in a few days, but a spirit of determination and co-operation on the part of all will help to bring prosperity much sooner than most people think."

"I also feel hopeful because President Harding has put on his overalls and is doing his best to use his great power and influence in the readjustment and the settlement of foreign and domestic questions which so vitally affect the economic situation and the prosperity of all our people."

Congress Members Feel Hurt by Act Of Georgia Solons

State Legislature Overlooked Efforts of Others to Back Resolution of Lee.

Washington, July 16.—(By Constitution Leased Wire.)—The Georgia legislature, through the passage of its resolution urging members of congress to support the measure "introduced by Hon. Gordon Lee," which provides that the secretary of the treasury advance $200,000,000 for the aid of the farmers has, unintentionally, no doubt, "hurt the feelings" of other members of congress.

It is altogether probable that Representative Hamilton, of Floyd and Singletary of Grady, did not know when they introduced their resolution that other members of the Georgia delegation had introduced legislation to that proposed by Mr. Lee. But, nevertheless, at least four other members of the delegation had introduced resolutions for the aid of the farmers by the advancement of government money.

Judge C. H. Brand first introduced a resolution providing that the money to be loaned to the farmers should come from the money made by the federal reserve banking system and distributed under the provisions of the federal farm loan act; then W. D. Upshaw introduced a measure to loan $200,000,000 direct to the farmers; then Judge Charles R. Crisp introduced legislation providing that the secretary of the treasury should loan $200,000,000 to the farmers at 3% per cent interest; then Gordon Lee introduced the resolution which the Georgia legislature urged the congress members of congress support; and then in the senate Senator W. J. Harris presented a measure practically identical with the two last named.

These members of congress and both of Georgia's senators are all desirous of the passage of any bill that will relieve the stricken farmers of the south. Every member of the Georgia delegation, whether he had introduced such a bill or not, will support any sort of legislation tending to this relief.

The members of congress, whose bills were not mentioned in the Georgia legislature's resolution, were not jealous of any other member of the delegation. On the other hand, they have worked harmoniously for the interests of the farmers. But they naturally want members of their own legislature to support the people of Georgia to know that they have striven to help the farmers.

ARMY OFFICER IS SENTENCED TO HARD LABOR

New York, July 16.—After the longest court-martial proceedings on record at Governor's Island, Captain Beverly Grayson Chew, of Washington, was convicted tonight of conduct unbecoming an officer, forgery and impersonation of fellow officers. He was sentenced to a minimum of six months and seven years at hard labor in a military prison to be designated later.

The trial continued eight weeks. Every effort was made to build a defense to prove that the accused officer was innocent of the charges and wounds received in the line of duty when in October, 1920, he was sent to the front in the battle of Meuse-Argonne. He was not responsible for his actions in the line of duty. The captain will retain his status in the service. It was said at Governor's Island, until the case had been reviewed and the findings finally acted upon by officials in Washington.

NEGRO MEETS DEATH IN SHOOTING AFFRAY

Hazlehurst, Ga., July 16.—(Special.)—Ben Dow, a negro about twenty-five years old, was instantly killed by Andrew Roddenberry, a young white man living with his father on a farm approximately five miles from Hazlehurst this afternoon after he had been shot with a pistol in the hands of the negro.

Several dogs belonging to the negro had just killed one of the Roddenberry sheep, it was stated, and it is declared by eye witnesses that the negro was following his dogs and making no effort to prevent them from destroying the drove. Young Roddenberry ran out of his father's house with a pump gun. It is said that he was going to kill the dogs, but just before he reached them the negro met him. Just as they met Miss Lella Wise, a sister-in-law of young Roddenberry, who resided with the Roddenberrys, reached the scene and saw the negro had a pistol in his hand. She immediately brought his pump gun into place.

As the second shot from the negro's pistol went wild, the first shot fired by young Roddenberry landed full force in the negro's stomach and the second tore off the flesh from the left arm, while the last one landed just between the shoulder blades.

The negro fell to the ground with his pistol grasped tightly in his right hand. Several hundred people soon gathered but were very orderly and as soon as the officials of the county arrived and it was found that an inquest would not be necessary, word was sent to the negro's home for his father to come for the body. Dr. Overstreet, of Hazlehurst, who attended the wound of young Roddenberry, states that it is not serious.

STILLS ARE FOUND IN RAID BY SHERIFFS

Americus, Ga., July 16.—(Special.)—In a double-raid made yesterday by Sheriff Lucius Harvey, of Americus, and Sheriff C. M. Christian, of Webster county, two large stills were confiscated and brought here. One of the stills, it is alleged, belonged to Wade Frazer. Officers say it was found upon his plantation three miles from Americus, only a short distance from his home.

The other was found and confiscated by Sheriff Christian on the King place, in the Gooseberry district of Webster county. With the still on the Frazer place were found five barrels filled with fermented corn, and everything was in readiness to begin a run, although the still was a new one and had never been fired. A warrant was issued for Frazer, charging a felony.

Injunction Stops Day's Circulation Arkansas Paper

Harrison, Ark., July 16.—The Harrison Times, local daily paper, was enjoined from circulation of its issue of yesterday which contained a statement signed by Pete Venable, local leader in the strike of Milledgeville, Ga., July 16.—(Special.)—Homer Mashburn, who was arrested yesterday in connection with the Carl Watson killing case, was released last night. Mashburn established an alibi by proving he was in Macon. There have otherwise been no new developments in the case. The usual Saturday crowd from the country round about in town today are discussing in groups the case.

The mystery of it seems to be gripping and everybody is eager to learn about it. Authorities are very secret in their movements. The court investigation which begins Monday will attract large crowds, as a profound sensation has been created by the arrest of so many.

Six Old Warships Of Germany Rest Beneath Atlantic

Norfolk, Va., July 16.—(By the Associated Press.)—Six former enemy warcrafts now have found a last resting place on the floor of the Atlantic 75 miles off the Virginia coast. They will be joined next week by the light cruiser Frankfurt and dreadnaught Otrifriesland, the last of the German ships turned over to the United States for experiment purposes.

Destroyers and battleships of the Atlantic fleet sent down yesterday with shell fire two destroyers, the V-43 and S-132, in operations which consumed much of the entire day. Naval and army aircraft will undertake to destroy the Frankfurt Monday and the Otrifriesland Wednesday. Should they fail, destroyers will shell the Frankfurt and the Otrifriesland will fall a target to the 14-inch guns of the super-dreadnaught Pennsylvania, flagship of the Atlantic fleet.

While lacking much of the spectacular which marked the destruction of the old destroyer G-102 Monday by army aircraft, yesterday's operations were impressive and were conducted under weather conditions which naval officers said were far from favorable, the heavy guns, kicked up by a 25 knot wind pitching and tossing the targets as well as the attacking destroyers.

Under orders to fire at a speed of 32 knots, the thirty-sixth destroyer division bore down on the target from the distant horizon just before noon only to find as they dashed at speed that the ships were making the maximum of roll in a choppy sea. They withheld their fire and set out over a wide area for another run by fifteen knots, with the Dickinson leading followed by the Sclard, Leary, Schenck and Herbert.

When the ships were six thousand yards off the marks, which were anchored in an approximate column 400 yards apart, the Leary let go with three of her four-inch rifles. Each gun was discharged ten times. One of thirty shells went through the bridge of the V-43, and another passed through the starboard bow and out of the stern. Naval officers said that had the V-43 been in action with ammunition aboard she would have done for her causing either a magazine or a boiler explosion.

With the Eicard dropping out to act later as a dispatch boat, the destroyer column still running steamed away to come up again for the attack on the S-132, the Herbert. As the vessels stood down to the firing line, a three-masted schooner sailed leisurely across the range despite warnings from the Pennsylvania and she was within a few hundred yards of the Herbert when that ship opened fire. Thirty shells taking effect on a matter of part of the attack. Led by the Florida, flagship of Vice Admiral Scates, Byrd, of Oakpark, La., in a Washington suburb last week. After a separation between Goetz and his wife, in which Byrd was alleged to have been concerned, Byrd came to Goetz's house, armed, and was killed during an interchange of shots.

Within a few minutes after the firing ceased, the V-43 was settling by the head. She filled gradually with water from the forward deck was awash. Her end then was only a matter of minutes. The stern hoisted higher and higher until it was at right angles, and as it leaped down there was an explosion caused by the firing of a gun against the air in the after compartments.

Meanwhile, the big battleships, augmented by the Delaware, which went into line behind the Florida, started away on a wide circular course which would bring them back to the 7,500 yard range from which the Delaware opened fire. The S-132, three shells in the first salvo, before the full 140 shells allotted the ships had been fired the old German destroyer was sent to the bottom. From stern to stern, explosion following explosion as each shell found the mark. An early shot carried away the main mast and another set fire to the after house. Others exploded below decks, causing columns of smoke to come from the ship's funnels.

Despite this punishment the S-132 remained afloat until after the naval officers, foreign naval attaches and other observers who came down from Washington on the naval transport Henderson had started away on the homeward trip.

A radio message from the Pennsylvania announced the sinking at 7:04 p. m. to those on the Henderson and to the newspaper correspondents who had been transferred to the destroyer Sicard which made a forced draft run to Norfolk.

ELECTION FOR HOUSE IN JEFFERSON JULY 30

Louisville, Ga., July 16.—(Special.)—Under a provision of the election for extra representatives in the Georgia legislature Jefferson county is one of the counties that will have an additional representative. A long time ago Jefferson had two members in the house but in 1910 her representation was cut down to one member. The new apportionment this year gives her back the lost number. So far the announcements for this place have been only two. One is R. V. Harris, a young lawyer of Louisville, and the other is J. B. Singletary, of Bartow. The election will be held on July 30. The present representative is James R. King, of Wrens.

MASHBURN PROVES ALIBI IN DEATH OF CARL WATSON

Milledgeville, Ga., July 16.—(Special.)—Homer Mashburn, who was arrested yesterday in connection with the Carl Watson killing case, was released last night. The usual Saturday crowd from the country round about in town today are discussing in groups the case.

The mystery of it seems to be gripping and everybody is eager to learn about it. Authorities are very secret in their movements. The court investigation which begins Monday will attract large crowds, as a profound sensation has been created by the arrest of so many.

Amnesia Victim Reported Found With Mind Blank

Atlanta Man Who Disappeared in New York Is Located Saturday.

Clarence Boggs, of 60 East 12th street, secretary and treasurer of the Atlanta branch of Phonographs, Inc., who was reported as missing in New York, has been found. In a message to W. L. F. Rosenblatt, Atlanta manager of Phonographs, Inc., J. C. Boggs, brother of the man reported as missing and manager of the Laurelton hotel, where Mr. Boggs was stopping while in New York, says that Boggs was found early Saturday morning walking back and forth in front of a moving picture house. Physicians stated that he was a victim of amnesia. Mr. Boggs disappeared from his hotel Thursday and a search was immediately instituted by the police. According to one version of the affair, Mr. Boggs, when found, was unable to tell where he had been during the time since his disappearance. Mr. Rosenblatt is inclined to disbelieve this and says that Mr. Boggs had probably been off all day Friday on business. "I received a message about noon Friday from J. C. Boggs, stating that his brother had left the hotel and that he did not know where he was. About 11 o'clock Friday night I received another message which declared that Clarence Boggs had returned to his hotel and that he was all right. If he was ill his brother would immediately let me know about it," he said. Mr. Boggs, who is well known in this city, was spending his vacation in New York, at the same time attending to business there that required his attention. One of the largest lacemakers in France has women working for him who have eight generations of lacemaking ancestors behind them.

COBB TORRENCE MAKES VALIANT FIGHT FOR LIFE

Cobb Torrence, 22, well-known young Atlantan and recent graduate from the University of Georgia, who was badly injured in an automobile accident on Peachtree road early Wednesday, was reported slightly improved during the day by physicians at Grady hospital. For a time it was thought that his chances for recovery were very small, but the gallant fight for life that young Torrence has been making has convinced hospital authorities that his recovery is now probable. Torrence suffered a fractured skull and a broken leg and was hurt internally when the car in which he was riding was struck by a passing automobile near the Brookwood station on Peachtree road about 2 o'clock Thursday morning. The car turned over. Companions of Torrence escaped serious injury. No case has been made against the driver of the other car, though it is believed that his identity is known to the young men who were in the wrecked car.

SIMS TO STUDY LAWS ON TRAFFIC IN OTHER CITIES

Thorough study of traffic conditions in large cities of the north and east, which he will visit this week, will be made by Councilman Walter A. Sims as a basis of recommendations he expects to offer for relief of Atlanta's congestion. Mr. Sims will submit his ideas to city council. Among the cities he will visit are Cleveland, Washington, Philadelphia and New York. Mr. Sims will give special attention to how these cities handle their parking problems.

In last week's eight main obstacles prosperity as a nation
our progress as individ-

These three staples are:
I. A willingness to see down all wait for opportunity to come around.

2. A belief that the position of a workingman is without hope of betterment.
3. A tendency to blame our present economic system for all our troubles.

4. A certain man is working in the same shop today where he worked in 1872—a man who is mentally, morally and physically fit in every way. He is doing the same routine work that he did 50 years ago at approximately the same "real wage." Another man that went through the same factory has in a period of five years gone from $100 mechanic's position to a $20,000 managerial position with a firm of contractors.

5. Luck may have had something to do with the selection of the latter man, but it had absolutely nothing to do with his making good in the position. The former may not have had the opportunities of the latter, but it is safe to say that he failed to utilize as well what opportunities he did have.

6. Captains of Industry.
The captains of industry today came from the ranks of the wage-earners of yesterday. The captains of industry tomorrow must come from the ranks of the wage-workers of today. Opportunity to develop is the sine qua non of making good. Make your own opportunity if you can. A great many progressive employers are awake to the existence of this opportunity. Cooperation in this between employer and wage-worker is an important factor in our development.

7. A much more important factor is your ability to recognize an opportunity when it arrives. Opportunity taps at least once at every man's door.

"Opportunity tapped at a door.
With a chance for the brother to climb."
He rapped till his fingers were sore
And muttered: "Come on, let me in."

Here's a hill that I know you can do.
Here's a hill that I know you can climb."
But the brother inside
Very quickly replied:
"Old fellow, I haven't got time."
"Old fellow, I haven't got time."

"Opportunity wandered along In search of a man who would rise.
He said to the indolent throng:
"Here's a chance for the fellow who tries."
But each of them said with a smile,
"I wish I could do it, but I'm too busy today."
And I'm sorry to say
That I really haven't the time."

"At last Opportunity came To a man who was burdened with care,
And said: "I now offer the same Opportunity that has been theirs.
Here's a duty that ought to be done.
It's a chance if you're got the time to take it."
Said the man with a grin,
"Come along, pass it in!
I'll either find time or I'll make it."

"Of all the excuses there are
By which this world is accursed.
This habit of time by far
The poorest, the feeblest,
The worst.
A delusion it is and a snare;
If the habit is yours, you should shake it."
For if you want to do
What is offered to you You'll find time to do it, or make
it."

Don't wait for the opportunity.
The only kind of situations and positions that comes to one who waits are unpleasant situations and embarrassing positions—if one waits long enough.
Once for my own amusement I reduced making good to an algebraic equation. The result is as follows:
Ability plus Opportunity, equals Disappointment.
Opportunity minus Ability, equals Failure.
No Ability plus No Opportunity, equals Stagnation.
Ability plus opportunity, equals Success.

The above algebraic equation clearly shows that ability is the basis of all success. It also shows that along with ability must go opportunity before success can be consummated.
If one has ability but never gets the right opportunity to exploit that ability it is not failure, but disappointment. There are thousands of people with ability along certain lines who never get an opportunity to use their ability. There are thousands of people with marked ability who, on account of the obstacles on the road to success never develop the ability to its maximum.
Failure comes to those who get the opportunity but have not the ability to fill the position; while those who possess ability and never get an opportunity to live in ignorant contentment.

8. Dare a Workingman Hope?
In a previous article I made this statement:
"One of the saddest features of the present teaching of trade unionism is the false doctrine that labor no longer has any hopes of developing into the employer class. Surely organized labor is making its saddest mistake in accepting this position as final."

Of course, all labor leaders do not make workers believe that it is impossible for them to develop as individuals. But whenever they do, the idea is entirely wrong. Instead, every worker should know that it is possible for him to become an employer, that it is possible for him to become even a capitalist, and that all these things are possible under our present social, economic, and political order. Not only possible, yes, they are all stimulated by our present system. Hence, labor leaders should not teach labor that it must always remain labor. The possibilities of development of the individual should be inculcated in the minds of the great mass of workers. Each should know that there is an attainable goal; that he has latent power; that he has talents; that he has intellect; that all of these things are capable of development; and that the possibilities of developing them lie almost wholly within himself.

9. Blaming Economic System.
If you visit the Boston common on some fine sunny spring Sunday afternoon you may hear a polyglot of orations blaming our social, economic or political order for the failures of the great mass of people.
It is rather paradoxical that Joseph Fels, manufacturer of Fels' naphtha soap, once blamed the same social, economic and political order for his marvelous success. The same energy, time, and effort spent in blaming our economic order beyond to making good would achieve the desired result.

Men are successful because they have certain six characteristics referred to in a later article. These soap-box orators seem to think that men are successful because they have money or because an economic system favors them. The causation is just the other way. Men are

Jonnard was hit hard, but was generally effective in the pinches, pulling out of a bad hole in the eighth when the first four Pelicans up hit safely. PERRIN WINS AT GUN CLUB

Cedartown Wins

In one of the most interesting shoots seen at the Atlanta Gun club this season, W. H. Perrin, the most consistent shooter of the club, killing 50 straight clay pigeons Saturday, capturing first honors of the day.

Only five squads of five men each took part in the shoot Saturday, on account of the big Florida state shoot, held the last three days of last week at Jacksonville, which attracted several squads of shooters from this city.

Mr. Perrin and R. E. Cullinane were in the last squad and up until this squad took the traps, it looked as though the honors were going to Hal Hentz, who had broken 48, and J. H. Fuller, who had connected with 47. But Mr. Perrin and Mr. Cullinane evidently thought differently about the matter, for one of the most thrilling contests between two of the club's best shooters began to take place.

Mr. Cullinane lost his last bird in event one, but connected with the next 25 without missing, making him down one bird with a score of 49, while Mr. Perrin took his first straight and connected with his next 25 in the second event thus killing a straight 50 and winning the first honors of the day with Cullinane second and Hal Hentz, third.

This is considered remarkable shooting, as the afternoon was windy, twisting the tiny clays in every direction.

Hentz is the score at the 50 birds a sit appeared last Saturday afternoon: W. H. Perrin, 50; R. E. Cullinane, 49; Hal Hentz, 48; J. H. Fuller, 47; L. H. Bowditch, 44; F. M. Field, 46; H. Avery, 45; J. P. Ryan, 45; W. C. Carpenter, 44; S. P. Cronheim, 43; L. H. Bowditch, 42; J. M. Bessie, 41; W. A. Kinney, 38; P. A. Duke, 37; Van Wilkison, 36; J. Avery, 36; J. M. Norman, 35; Calhoun, 34; D. Daniels, 31; Mrs. E. Hamby, 30; Dr. G. C. Wollard, 25.

Just Another Pleased Haynes Owner

The new model Haynes 50 and its purchaser, R. L. Kilker, of 355 Oak street, Atlanta.

The above shows one of the new model Haynes 50 cars which is attracting considerable attention in Atlanta, and the south just now. Robert L. Kilker, special representative of the Buick National company, of Chicago, who resides in West End, and is shown standing by the car, has just purchased this pretty model and is already wearing the pleased smile of satisfaction so common among Haynes owners. Charles W. Tway Co., distributors for the entire south, reports a record business lately on the sales of Haynes cars. Mr. Tway leaves today for Kokomo, Ind., where the Haynes factory is located, going there to hurry shipments along to take care of the demand for this section.

KID GLEASON SOUGHT TO EXCHANGE FABER

Kid Gleason, manager of the Chicago White Sox, is enjoying a laugh to himself every day that Urban Faber pitches. Gleason was going to trade Faber last season, when the big lad failed to show class repeatedly. Owner Comiskey was willing that the trade go through, too, for the "Old Roman" figured Faber was probably all through. Gleason couldn't get just the sort of deal he wanted for Faber, so he decided to hold on to him. He is glad now

JOE TINKER TAKING UP FOR MINOR LEAGUERS

Joe Tinker, one time noted infielder of the Chicago Cubs and later manager of the Columbus team of the American association, comes to bat with the remark that minor league baseball has the major league dope beat to death. Tinker now manages the Orlando team in the Florida State league, and has acquired an interest in some hotel property. He says Florida is the greatest state in the union.

"LES" RAWLINGS GOES WITH PAIGE

Leslie W. Rawlings Now
With the Universal Motors

Leslie W. Rawlings, known to thousands personally and by name, as "Les," is now a member of the sales organization of the Universal

LESLIE W. RAWLINGS.

Motors company, distributors for the Paige car.

"Les" was for a long time connected with The Constitution, and at the time he left the paper to join the sales force of the E. R. Parker Motor company he was sporting editor, and more or less famous for his "Read 'Em an' Weep" and other sporting stories.

Mr. Rawlings states that after a careful examination of the Paige car, and the service which the Universal Motors company have to offer, that their proposition to him was so attractive that he could not afford to turn it down.

"Les" has been in the automobile business for about two years, during which time he has been unformly successful, receiving several promotions. He is very enthusiastic over his new connection and just to prove to his new boss that times are not hard, he hit the trail early last week and returned with a purchase order for a 666 sedan, which, by the way, is well over the four thousand dollar mark.

See Us NOW about your Battery

Suppose some queer trick of fate made you the owner of this service station and me the customer.

And I came in some day red hot because my battery had gone wrong—

And I had missed my train—

And I lost out on an important engagement—

And disappointed a good customer—

And stood to lose a lot of money—

You bet your life I'd be good and sore, but I'm mighty sure I couldn't ask for any more courtesy and consideration and square dealing and SERVICE than we are giving right now day after day.

The time to have us look at

The Packard Twin Six shown above was used as The Constitution's pathfinding car on this trip, consequently it is difficult to say just where the roads were bad, or where the hills were difficult, for with the Twin Six they were neither.

The performance of the car over all kinds of roads was one of the features of the trip. Not a hill so steep, and not a road so rough, that the occupants of the car were aware of the difficulties under which the car operated at times.

The car was piloted over the entire trip by S. L. Tribble, of the sales force of Packard Enterprises of Georgia, Inc., and, as he remarked, "the Single Six Packards were more noticeable in Chattanooga than were the hills—there being so many more of them."

However, in taking this trip in any kind of car one will be sure to be sure that the brakes are working properly, and that a set of chains are available in case of heavy or continued rainfall.

HERE'S NEW PRICES ON PACKARD MODELS

"In the increased sales activity which is being reported by Packard distributors and dealers throughout the country, is found conclusive proof of the restoration of public confidence in the stability of present day automobile prices," says Sam Dick of the Packard Enterprises of Georgia, Incorporated, local Packard distributor.

"Generally speaking, July 1, 1921, marked the close of a long tedious period of price uncertainty. Now that the stabilized prices are universally acknowledged, those who have delayed buying for fear of a price reduction are entering the market, determined to make their purchases quickly to be to have the services of a car for the summer months."

"Although Packard is producing almost ten per cent more cars and trucks this month than were produced in July of last year, still greater production schedules are being planned to meet the inevitable demand occasioned by the revised prices."

DUPRE AND NORTH VISIT REO FACTORY

C. W. DuPre, president, and Frank North, sales manager for the Reo Atlanta company, have just returned from the Reo factory, at Lansing, Mich., where they went to consummate new contracts for 1922 and to otherwise get ready for the good business they are expecting for the coming year.

The Reo Atlanta company has enjoyed a splendid season, and both the representatives who visited Lansing are enthusiastic over the prospects for business for the next twelve months. "Everything looks mighty good, and we are certainly expecting a full share of the automobile trade which we believe is bound to be on us during the coming year," said Mr. North, Saturday.

CORD TIRES GAIN FAST IN POPULARITY

The increasing desire for cord tires from car owners is indicated by recent production figures of the Mason Tire and Rubber company, of Kent, Ohio. These show 50 per cent of their production is in cord tires and that this ratio is growing constantly in favor of cords.

New Lexington Model---The "Lark"

One of the most attractive automobiles that has appeared on Auto Row for some time is now being displayed at the Taylor Motor company, 222 Peachtree street. It is one of the newest of the Lexington line—a brand-new model—known as the "Lark." The car itself is one of grace and beauty and every accessory of the most modern type, and of the most attractive material is attached to it.

Wright Comes Here As District Manager For Lee Tire Co.

Announcement is made by Ward Fitzpatrick, branch manager of the Lee Tire and Rubber Co., at 227 Peachtree street, that his company is to have a new southern district manager, in the coming to Atlanta of George H. Wright.

Mr. Wright comes here direct from New York, but has been stationed in the past mainly in the west for his company. He has been with the Lee Tire and Rubber Co. for more than twenty years, and has held many places of large responsibility with them. He is perhaps one of the best posted men in the country on tires and the rubber industry generally. Though one of the oldest men in point of service connected with the company, he has never before been located in the south.

His territory comprises all of the south, including Oklahoma and Texas, and his duties will carry him from time to time all over this territory, where he will, no doubt, make many new and close friends among Lee tire dealers and buyers. In addition to his long experience, which will add prestige to the celebrated puncture-proof Lee tire in this section, he is personally a most genial and pleasing business man, and is already receiving a cordial welcome along Auto Row.

The Lee Tire and Rubber Co., is soon to give up its present location at 227 Peachtree street, and move to 328 Peachtree, where larger and better quarters will render it better able to care for its constantly increasing trade.

GEO. H. WRIGHT.
He comes to Atlanta as southern district manager for Lee Tire and Rubber Co.

makers of this pretty type of car, and has received many inquiries concerning it and has heard scores of complimentary remarks passed upon it.

J. C. Tedger is associated with Mr. Taylor in his work for the Lexington company, and will assist him in travelling southern territory.

PAIGE
The Most Beautiful Car in America

A Safe, Sane Investment

Our five passenger "Glenbrook" is a new 1921 car—not an old model re-painted and re-christened for the selling season. Keep that point in mind please. It amounts to a positive guarantee against sudden and unwarranted depreciation.

Furthermore, the price has been reduced to $1635. You have only to look at the car to realize that no greater value was ever offered before, during or after the war. In fact, no such car was possible until 1921.

These are hard facts, and they are very important. Give them a little consideration and you will understand why the "Glenbrook" is so universally regarded as a safe, sane and profitable investment.

Foreign Trade Problem Puzzles Experts of W. S.

BY R. L. BARNUM

New York, July 16.—The time of the week when the world makes its plans for at least six or eight months ahead. What can be said of the unfavorable and favorable factors in the existing situation?

On the discouraging side men of affairs in Wall street are pointing first to the falling off in exports to the country's greatly increased farm and factory facilities to the failure to finance foreign trade except for cash paid in gold. That the proposed high tariff will further complicate the problem of finding employment for our excess farm and factory facilities in foreign trade is generally recognized.

Dividing Foreign Trade.

That we are facing a real problem in dividing the foreign trade shown by this week's figures from Washington giving June exports at $340,000,000 against $330,000,000 for May of this year, and $621,000,000 for June of 1931, and $621,000,000 for June of 1930, is not a new one. Our total exports for the calendar year ended June 31 were $6,559,000,000 and our imports were $6,559,000,000, making our total foreign trade for the year $13,118,000,000, against $12,449,000,000 for the preceding twelve months.

Next it is being pointed out that in some lines of essential industry—steel, building materials, etc.—the market is very unsettled. Then it is being generally recognized that high government expenditures for war and high taxes and that high taxes are crippling business.

Freight Rates Higher.

Next it is being pointed out that freight rates on the average are up 50 per cent since the increases began, and that in some lines the high rates are preventing a free movement of goods. Next it is being pointed out that while panic interest rates are gradually disappearing throughout the world, the federal reserve system still owe the federal reserve banks $1,800,000,000, that interest on these loans is being paid by the member banks at the rate of 6 to 8 per cent per annum; that such rates on such large borrowings do not indicate an early return of easy money.

Demand for Goods Abroad.

Taking these unfavorable factors in turn it is being argued by some of our best bankers in Wall street that the decline in our foreign trade will be checked by the near-by regular seasonal demand from abroad for grain, foodstuffs, cotton, etc. June exports, as shown above, being larger than those for May; that the failure to extend the federal loan to foreign countries has made those countries understand that they must either send gold or put their own gold in order so that they will again become a good business risk; that criticism of the proposed high tariff by foreign countries and by our own old-time republican business men and farmers is growing in such a rate that there is not a chance that the bill in anything like its present form will go to the senate; that readjustment in the steel, building trades, and in coal is rapidly taking place; that much of the demand for reducing government expenses and taxes is expected from the work being done by the Bureau of Economic Warfare and the international arm limitation proposals made this week by President Harding; that individual freight rates are blocking free movement of business are Arnold-Williams Wedding Solemnized.

A wedding of cordial interest to a wide circle of friends was that of Miss Mary Lou Arnold, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry H. Arnold, of Monroe, to Henry H. Williams, of Eatonton, which was solemnized Thursday afternoon, July 12, at 3:30 o'clock, at the First Methodist church, Monroe. Rev. Walter S. Robertson, pastor, officiating. The church was beautifully decorated in southern smilax, ferns, palms, Shasta daisies and phlox, interspersed with white, unshaded tapers, which cast a soft radiance over the brilliant party.

Just before the ceremony, Mrs. Edward C. Ellis, sang sweetly, "Because," accompanied on the piano by Mrs. L. D. Wall, and on the violin by Mr. J. M. Day, who also rendered the wedding march and other nuptial music.

Attendants.
Mrs. Ben Black, sister of the bride was maid of honor and only attendant and wore a beautiful tulle and tulle, with large picture hat of blue maling. She carried an armful of Shasta daisies.

Percy Rose, of Eatonton, was groom's best man.

Those acting as ushers were: Messrs. Ben Black, Sid Wheeler, Alvin Arnold, Gus Arnold, Newton Nowell and Talmadge Mayfield, of Monroe.

The Bride.
The bride who was given in marriage, by her uncle Mr. N. L. Gallaway, was unusually lovely in her going-away suit of dark blue tulle and fall model hat of blue duvetyne with brown accessories. She wore a corsage of valley lilies and orchids.

Immediately after the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Williams left for a brief bridal tour, after which they will be at home to their friends in Eatonton.

Pound-Cook.
Woodland.—A marriage of much interest to a circle of friends was that of Miss Marie Blanford Pound, of Eatonton, to Robert Cook, of Eatonton, which was solemnized Thursday evening, July 7, at 8:30 o'clock, at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Pound, of Eatonton. A. P. Ford, pastor of the Methodist church, officiating. Only a few friends and near relatives were present. There were no attendants.

Pink and green formed the color note for the artistic decorations in the living-room, where the ceremony was performed. Southern smilax festooned the walls, and an altar of handsome ferns was arranged, with baskets holding pink carnations and tied with fluffy bows of pink tulle at either side. Pink-shaded, waxen tapers shed a soft radiance over the scene.

The wedding music was rendered by Miss Lou Pound, the only sister of the groom. Mendelssohn's wedding march was used, and during the ceremony "Traumer" was softly played. Miss Pound wore a dainty gown of embroidered white crepe de chine with corsage bouquet of white carnations.

The bride was lovely in a smart navy blue tailored suit of Poiret tulle, elaborately embroidered in gray, with harmonizing accessories. She wore a becoming hat of blue broad, ostrich-trimmed. Her bouquet was of white carnations showered with valley lilies, and tied with white brocade tulle.

Immediately after the ceremony, Mr. and Mrs. Pound left for Tybee and other points. Upon their return, they will be at home with Mr. Pound's mother, Mrs. J. J. Pound, in Woodland.

Vann-Clark.

A very pretty June wedding was that of Miss Lois Vann to Arthur Clark, which took place on the afternoon of June 29 at the First Baptist church, Thomasville, Ga. The church was beautifully decorated, the pulpit being banked with southern smilax, pink crepe, myrtle and roses.

To the strains of "Lohengrin's" wedding march, played on the organ by Miss Minnie Lee Darley, the bride and groom entered the church together, where the ring ceremony was performed by the Rev. W. M. Harris.

The bride wore her traveling suit of navy tulle, with hat to match. Her flowers were a corsage of sweetheart roses and valley lilies.

The ushers were T. K. Vann and Leon Vann.

The bride is the attractive daughter of H. H. Vann, of this city, and has hosts of friends in and around Thomasville.

The groom is widely known, both socially and in a business manner, and holds a responsible position with the Standard Oil company.

Immediately after the ceremony the couple left for a short trip to Savannah, and after August first will be at home with Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Dekle, on Colton avenue, Thomasville, Ga.

Brown-Payne.

Camilla, Ga., July 15.—(Special.) Mrs. David Wesley Payton, of Camilla, Ga., announce the marriage of her daughter, Bertha Brown, to Marcus V. Payne, of Sebring, Fla., which was solemnized on Thursday afternoon, July 14, at 4 o'clock, at the First Baptist church, in Albany.

Kelly-Johnson.

Mr. J. S. Kelly wishes to announce the marriage of his daughter, Esther, to William Thomas Johnson, Jr., of College Park, which was solemnized July 15, at the Rev. S. R. Bell, pastor of Trinity Methodist church, officiating.

There were no cards and the marriage was announced only a few days ago.

She had lately been connected with the Lenwood hospital, Augusta, in Red Cross work, and has made many friends since being there.

Mr. Wilson is the son of Mr. and Mrs. W. I. Wilson, of Augusta, and is well and favorably known there. The bride and groom are at home in the personnel quarters of the Lenwood hospital, where the married contingent make their home.

Hollis-Helmus.

Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Hollis, of Godfrey, Ga., announce the marriage of their daughter, Annie Laura, to Raleigh L. Helmus, of Atlanta, July 2. Ceremony took place at the home of Rev. Roy D. Harris, pastor of Harris Street Presbyterian church.

Miss De Pass Weds Mr. Spain.

Dr. and Mrs. M. H. De Pass, of Gainesville, Fla., announce the marriage of their daughter, Mary O. Spain, to Frank O. Spain, Jr., the marriage having been an event of July 12, at 2:45 o'clock at the home of the bride on East Main street in Gainesville. Archdeacon Holt, of the Episcopal church, performed the ceremony, which was witnessed by a group of relatives and friends.

The bride is a lovely brunette and was a debutante of a winter ago and is among the prominent young women of the state of Florida. She was educated at St. Mary's, at Raleigh, N. C.

Mr. Spain is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Spain, who were well-known citizens of Atlanta before going to Gainesville, Fla., for residence in 1915. He was graduated from the University of Florida, where he made high honors, and is a lawyer by profession, with offices in Moore Haven, Fla., where he and his bride will make their home.

Mr. and Mrs. Spain are at the Piedmont hotel during their stay in Atlanta and expect to return to Florida this week.

Lions and Civitans To Play Ball.

The Lions and the Civitans are planning to come together in a battle royal on Saturday next, the scene of action being Ponce de Leon ball park, and the time 2 o'clock.

As in the olden days when gallant knights fought for the glory of fair ladies and the cause of freedom, spurred on by songs and cries of encouragement, so Saturday will see the welkin ring when these two popular clubs play ball, the pecuniary benefits of which will go to provide athletic equipment for the rehabilitated soldiers and to add to the auditorium fund of the Atlanta Woman's club, two of the most noteworthy civic causes of the community.

Mrs. B. M. Boykin, president of the Woman's club, will be general chairman from that organization, Julian Bohm for the Civitans and Frank L. Bond for the Lions club. Mrs. Boykin will be assisted by Mrs. Alonzo Richardson as vice chairman; Mrs. Arthur Hazard in general treasurer; Mrs. Norman Sharp, chairman of boy scouts and ushers; Mrs. William Hanneburg will have charge of the concessions, and Mrs. Harry Goodhart and Mrs. John Cooper of the tickets.

Fonville McWhorter, for the American Legion, and Chandler Lapsley, J. L. Nicholson, J. J. L. and B. Babbitt will represent the rehabilitation students.

All Atlantans should feel that this is a splendid opportunity to show their spirit, both national and civic. The Woman's club is expecting to turn out a hundred per cent attendance, and each organization will have a strong selling force. Chairmen are asked to meet at the Chamber of Commerce Tuesday at 11 o'clock.

Report of Woman's Auxiliary to Wesley Memorial

Travelers' Aid Work.

The meetings of the Travelers' Aid Society are not suspended during the summer. The regular meeting was held as usual, the second Wednesday of the month, in the Central Congregational church. Reports presented by the agents at the railroad stations showed that 2,135 persons, old and young, large and small, well and ill, rich and poor, had received needed assistance during the month of June, in connection with the summer travel season. Of this number 785 were women, 607 girls, 129 children, 187 boys, 288 men and 131 were mothers with children. For 101 relatives or friends were located, 255 were placed on street car or taxi, 115 were directed to comfortable boarding houses and hotels, 165 were placed on trains, 78 received assistance with tickets or baggage, 38 were sent to co-operative homes, for 724 telephone messages were given or received, 41 telegrams were sent, 4 were sent to hospitals, 17 were sick and were cared for as necessary. Lunch was furnished to 27 who were hungry and without funds, 48 were foreigners and not able to speak or understand English, and 14 were turned over to the city mission. All these received definite help, and there were also 189 to whom indefinite acts of kindness were shown. At the meeting on Wednesday an instance was given of what the Travelers' Aid stands for. A lady in the city received a telegram from a cousin, a woman about 50, saying she would arrive on the midnight train from Mobile the next night. Immediately the agent at the railroad station called up, and a description of the cousin furnished, and the request made that she be placed in a taxi and when the taxi had just left, in a short time the cousin arrived, marveling at the perfect service of the Travelers' Aid, of which she barely knew the name.

It Fits Your Arch

When you buy a pair of shoes, you tell the clerk, or he discovers, the length and width of your foot. Do you ever have a chance to feel that the shoe is fitting exactly to the shape of your arch?

Usually not. And yet the arch is one of the vital parts of your foot. Only a few makes of shoes are designed to fit particularly the arch of the foot.

One of these makes, the leader in its class, is the Cantilever Shoe. The shank is flexible in this type of shoe, the arch is really arched just like the arch of your foot. Examine your foot and your shoe, and see if the shoe is shaped around the instep like your foot.

When you lace a Cantilever Shoe, the flexible shank rises and conforms to the under-curve of your foot. When you walk, the muscles have freedom to exercise and strengthen. So you walk with increased enjoyment. Your feet, being free, do not tire so quickly. The circulation being unrestrained, you feel a healthful glow which adds to your appearance.

If you have weak arches, the natural and healthful support afforded by the Cantilever Shoe, with its self-conforming arch, offers you the best opportunity to strengthen the arch muscles, without resorting to artificial appliances.

Light and flexible, comfortable and good looking, the Cantilever Shoe will please you as it has so many others. Sold in Atlanta only by Recital at Edison Hall.

The recital last Wednesday at Edison hall, 122 Peachtree street, was unusual in character and audience, at 5 o'clock, and C. R. Norman, who was in charge of these recitals, arranged for an impromptu affair.

Each number selected and given on the Edison seemed to have a certain appeal for each guest. The local artist which was expected to appear could not be present, but the recitals, in vocal, piano, orchestra and violin, proved to be an inspiration to everyone present and afforded an hour of unusual enjoyment.

Those who have not attended these recitals have surely missed a great treat, and in the happy little family there were many faces which have grown familiar from their frequent attendance, and could they speak to you personally, they would surely insist that you do not miss one of these recitals.

These recitals are free to the public. Next Wednesday Mrs. Kurtmuller will present three of her artist pupils in trio numbers. The hour is the same each Wednesday afternoon—from 5 to 6 o'clock.

Mrs. Thornton Issues Letter On Southern Forestry Meet

Mrs. Albert Thornton, president of the Atlanta City Federation of Women's clubs, has addressed the following letter to the federated club women of Atlanta:

"Dear Friend and Co-Worker: The Southern Forestry Congress will meet in Atlanta at the Piedmont hotel, July 20-22, inclusive.

"The importance of this meeting and the necessity of the people of Atlanta to take advantage of this opportunity to hear national and state experts discuss this vast and interesting subject cannot be too greatly stressed. The effort to educate the people to a proper understanding of the great value of our forests and the need of securing them for the future is one of the most important of our time, and the very best of the economic welfare of our state, makes this a convention of vital interest to every patriotic Georgian.

"Great Balance Wheel.

"It has been said that the forests of America must have a great and rapid increase in the production of lumber to meet the needs of the future. This is a fact, and it is a fact that the forests of Georgia are being rapidly destroyed. The need of securing them for the future is one of the most important of our time, and the very best of the economic welfare of our state, makes this a convention of vital interest to every patriotic Georgian.

"The Atlanta City Federation has shown its interest in this important work. Several years ago a called convention, in conjunction with a body of engineers, to consider and promote the idea of securing the Cherokee tract for a national reservation. This is now an assured fact. It is a part of the work of our federation to promote education, and to arouse public interest in matters of such vital importance to our community, our state. With this purpose, let us make every effort to secure a large attendance at this congress and do our utmost to secure the passage of the bill in the present legislative session.

"This bill calls for no appropriation as its members will serve without remuneration.

"Cordially yours,

"MRS. ALBERT E. THORNTON, President Atlanta City Federation of Women's clubs, and member Georgia Forestry Committee."

Women Workers Are Welcomed
To Bryn Mawr

Bryn Mawr, that stronghold of the higher education for women, has embarked this summer on the most novel enterprise recorded this year in education.

The outlook describes the innovation as follows: "For the first time in this country, a college for women opened its doors to a group of women in industry, for their use during an intensive two-month course of study, when the Summer School for Women Workers in Industry began on June 15 at Bryn Mawr college. Seventy young women between 20 and 25 years of age, representing various industrial groups, make up the student body of this unique experiment. For this first session the definition of women workers in industry is 'Women who are working with the tools of their trade and not in a supervisory capacity. The initial group, therefore, does not include teachers, office workers, saleswomen in stores and shops, household workers, or waitresses.'

"Requirements for admission included ability to read and write English, common school education or its equivalent, and sound health. Membership in a trade union had nothing to do with a candidate's eligibility—in fact, the school definitely announces as its policy that it shall not be committed to any dogma or theory, but shall conduct its teaching in a broad spirit of impartial inquiry, with absolute freedom of discussion and academic freedom of teaching.

"The courses offered are those that have been requested by the students themselves: English, writing and spoken; public speaking, literature, history, economics, government, elementary law, physiology and hygiene, community life, general psychology, appreciation of art, industrial organization and labor movements and problems.

"Bryn Mawr alumnae are among the tutors and assistants in the school, and will help in the organization of outdoor sports, which are an important feature in the healthy life of the college student.

"In this intermingling of social and athletic activities will come an inevitable exchange of ideas and views which will tend, it is hoped, to a clearer understanding of social problems on both sides. On the one hand is the worker, taught by the stern discipline of life itself when economic adversity has dominated over her ambition and success, and on the other hand is the woman trained and equipped by the best of modern educational advantages as found in our colleges and universities.

"Among the industrial groups represented by the students are weavers, sewing machine operators, shirt and collar makers, milliners (trimmers), workers on women's and children's garments, hosiery, cordage, proof-readers, silk workers and soap workers. While a large number of students are not members of trade unions, various labor organizations throughout the country, realizing the educational importance of the enterprise, are contributing to a scholarship fund which covers the expense of students who might otherwise be prevented from attending the school. An interesting recognition of the broad basis and educational value of the work has come through the donation of a scholarship by the Bank of United States, in New York city.

MRS. CAREY THOMAS,
President of Bryn Mawr.

Atlanta and Moscow Linked
By Thrilling War Romance

Mrs. Hal Davidson, of Atlanta, who volunteered during the world war from Russia to train as a nurse, and was married to Dr. Davidson while he was serving from America in Siberia.

BY BESSIE SHAW STAFFORD.

This could really be a "once-upon-a-time-story," for little did Mrs. Hal Davidson reckon when she, who at that time was Natalia Beklemisheva, volunteered for training as a nurse, and entered the hospital at Petrograd, when her own country, Russia, was a strong ally of the French and English armies arrayed against Germany, that fate would find her making her home in Atlanta, Ga., U. S. A., and residing in an attractive bungalow at 1047 Orme circle.

In the year of 1914, when the German marched against France, that subject of this sketch entered upon her training at the St. Eugene hospital in Petrograd, from which she was graduated, afterward going to London in 1915 to visit her uncle, Peter Porohovskoy, who was head of the Russian commission for placing ammunition orders, and acting as legal advisor for his country. At this period, the grand duchess, the Dowager Queen Alexandra, in London, and was also cut off from her country by the revolution, so, as an act of patriotism, she sponsored the hospital at Harrogate, England, and was a nurse was Natalia Beklemisheva.

Romance Begins.
In the course of events and circumstances relating to the war, transfers placed her in other Russian hospitals. Then orders arrived to proceed to Siberia, and it was here where the real romantic adventure of her life began, and the Prince Charming of real life played the all important role.

Dr. Hal Davidson, an American army surgeon in the American forces, was serving in Russia, and after the completion of this service, he was discharged to take an appointment in the Red Cross in Siberia. It was in this latter country that the pathway of the nurse from Russia, and the physician from America crossed.

This brings the story to the Red Cross hospital at Tomsk, Siberia, with Dr. Davidson as the superintendent. There were fully 2,000 beds in the hospital, and only 40 nurses on the staff to care for the sick and wounded. Here the unit of 14 nurses and three doctors reported for duty from the British Red Cross which had been demobilized, having selected service in this hospital at Tomsk, rather than return to England. Orders announced that the Bolshevik army was advancing and retreat must begin immediately, requiring three months to accomplish this forced move into Vladivostok.

Thrice Wedded.
Then came the deadly typhus which attacked Dr. Davidson, and the pretty nurse appointed on his case was Natalia Beklemisheva. She saved his life with her careful and efficient manner of handling the type. Soulful brown eyes look at you and are expressive of humor and merriment, while her skin is fair enough to show that the deepening rich color is natural and untouching with rouge. Her hair is of the most exquisite shade of brown, with a glossy lustre, bespeaking perfect care, which she wears plainly wound around her forehead. Shapely white hands denote her birth and breeding.

Mrs. Davidson was born in Moscow, and when she was one year old her mother died, and at five her father's death left her an orphan. This kindly uncle, Peter Porohovskoy, a lawyer and a judge, being a bachelor, adopted her and planned for his niece a careful and natural education. He was educated by governesses, who taught her Russian, French, English and German languages, and she speaks all four fluently.

When she was a little girl she lived about the same sort of life and did the very same things any American girl might do in her girlhood days. She rode horseback, went to dances, attended musicals and plays. Her friends were among her own set, and she had many among royalty. The advantage of travel was hers, and with her uncle she spent much of her time in England, France and Switzerland.

The best part of the "married and lived happily ever afterward" story has been saved for its close, in the personality of Pete, Davidson, the cutest little blonde baby boy, who is just about two months old, and named for the beloved uncle, Peter Porohovskoy, in far away Russia, but who will come to Atlanta next Christmas to visit his niece and great nephew. Pete as yet takes his naps in his crib on the sleeping porch; plays with his baby toys and coos, all unconscious that his mother and daddy met in such romantic fashion, were married three times and gave their valuable services to a war-worn country—one as an American surgeon and the other as a Russian nurse; but some day he will grow up to manhood and appreciate the telling of this true story.

Will Discuss Protective Laws at Convention

Detroit, July 16.—Architects, lawyers, interior decorators, bankers, botanists, dentists, musicians, merchants, draughtsmen and representatives from a score or more other professions and lines of business, and each and every one a woman, will meet this month in one of the most significant conventions of the year.

The occasion is the third annual convention of the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, to be held in Cleveland, July 18-22.

Eight hundred business and professional women from all parts of the United States are expected to attend. Approximately four hundred voting delegates selected from the various clubs of business and professional women affiliated with the national federation will be in attendance. Nearly 350 clubs are now federated, having a total membership of about 40,000 business women. The growth has been enormous since the first convention in 1919.

when the federation was formed with only 202 individual members in attendance. This number has now reached the 40,000 mark and is still going strong.

There are federated clubs in every state except Rhode Island, and there are twenty-six federations. New York state heads the list with the largest number of federated clubs and Utah is the baby with only two.

The Cleveland club, which will be the hostess club during the convention, is one of the largest in the federation. At the last report it was second. Dr. Alice Butler, president of the Cleveland club, will be the official hostess.

Mrs. Lena Lake Forrest, president of the national federation, stated recently that the program committee tee expects to have at least one representative from a Canadian club who will bring word to the delegates assembled of the business and professional women of Canada.

"Thus the basis of friendship between the women of the United States and Canada will be strengthened—and a path made for the international co-operation of the business and professional women of these two governments," Mrs. Forrest stated, adding that at the fourth annual convention in 1922 the national federation expects to have representatives from a number of foreign countries, thus bringing the business women of the world together to exchange ideas.

Mrs. Forrest, who is an experienced insurance woman, has served two terms as president of the Detroit Women's club and two terms as president of the Michigan Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs. Miss Lota Kelly, vice president of the federation, is owner and manager of a chain of women's apparel shops in New Mexico. She has had the distinction of being the only woman to officially represent a city chamber of commerce at the annual convention of the Chambers of Commerce of the United States.

Miss Mary Stewart, the corresponding secretary, formerly dean of women of the University of Montana, was executive secretary of the women's division at the republican national committee during the past campaign. The recording secretary of the federation is Miss Ruth Rich, of Jacksonville, Fla. She is a newspaper woman, while the treasurer, Miss Gracia A. Rice, of Bridgeport, Conn., is assistant judge of the juvenile court in that city.

These women are representative of the variety of interest to every delegate. One is a boat ride on Lake Erie, which was the bait which lured the convention to Cleveland, and the other of a much more serious nature, is the subject of protective legislation for women. Miss Mary Van Kleek, of the Russell Sage foundation, New York city, and Mrs. Harriett Stanton Blatch will be the speakers.

Social Life Centers For Mid-Summer Season In Alfresco Affairs

The mid-summer social season in Atlanta has been given over to alfresco affairs at the country clubs, including swimming and picnic parties at Brookhaven, the Capital City Country club and also at the East Lake Country club. The week-end dinner dances on the terrace at the Piedmont Driving club attract those who desire to dance and dine, and to entertain charming visitors who are here during this summer.

Miss Margaret Saunders and Miss Catherine Camp, of Roanoke, the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Bolling Jones, and Miss Mary Temple, of Danville, three lovely Virginia visitors, have been central figures at a series of parties as the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Jones and Dr. and Mrs. Dunbar Roy. Mrs. Carl Ramspect's bridge tea on Monday afternoon will compliment Miss Temple, while the buffet supper at which Mr. and Mrs. William H. Kiser will entertain Thursday evening at "Knollwood," their home on Pace's Ferry road, will also be in honor of Miss Temple. Afterward the guests will go to the Capital City club roof to dance.

PERSONAL ITEMS OF INTEREST.

Miss Phoebe Yancey returns from Rome today where she has been visiting her grand-parents, Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton Yancey, and on Wednesday her host and hostess, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph S. Raine, will invite the members of the college set to meet her at a tea-dance and picnic at Brookhaven. Other affairs will be arranged in honor of Miss Yancey, who is from Glenridge, N. J. Captain and Mrs. Kendall Jordan Fielder have arrived from Camp Meade, Maryland, to visit their parents, Dr. and Mrs. Logan Crichton, at their home on Piedmont avenue. Miss Helen Gottschaldt, of Hempstead, L. I., the guest of her brother and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Allan Gottschaldt, has been featured in a number of parties, and will remain through this week.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Francis West are entertaining their sister, Mrs. Ira C. Jones, of Los Angeles, Calif., who will spend several weeks here. Mrs. Jones is the daughter of the late Colonel Andrew J. West, a pioneer citizen of Atlanta.

ATLANTANS WILL GO TO EUROPE.

Mrs. Albert Thornton and Mr. and Mrs. Albert Thornton Jr. will leave Atlanta the middle of next week for New York, where they will sail on Tuesday, July 26, on the Aquitania for Europe. A most interesting itinerary is planned by this trio of congenial travelers on their arrival in England. A motor trip through the lake district and Wales will be enjoyed, then after spending some time in London, they will go by aeroplane to France, and will visit Deauville, the fashionable sea-shore resort on the coast of France. They will also motor through Holland, and visit the battlefields of France. Mrs. Thornton and Mr. and Mrs. Thornton Jr. have engaged passage on the new steamer "City of Paris," and will return on September 15 to America.

SAILING ON STEAMER OLYMPIC.

The steamer Olympic sailed from

New York yesterday afternoon at 3 o'clock, with more than 800 first cabin passengers bound for Cherbourg and Southampton.

Members of the Oxford and Cambridge golf and tennis teams are returning to England by the Olympic.

A group of well-known society people on board were Mr. and Mrs. Shepard Krech, of Boston and New York; Mr. and Mrs. Bradley Martin; Mrs. Mortimer Schiff and Miss Dorothy Schiff; Mrs. Stacy Earnest Hill of Atlanta; Mr. and Mrs. Henry Clay Wall, of Rockingham, N. C.; Mr. and Mrs. John W. Grant; Miss Anne Grant and John W. Grant, Jr.; Mr. and Mrs. Charles L. Gately, of Atlanta; and Miss Fanny Manley, of Atlanta.

WEEKLY LUNCHEON FOR WOMEN VOTERS.

The Atlanta League of Women Voters will hold its weekly luncheon Tuesday at twelve-thirty in the small dining room of the Chamber of Commerce cafe. A general discussion of the activities of the state legislature is the feature of the program. These luncheons are held every Tuesday, in the Chamber of Commerce cafe, and have been remarkably well attended.

It is the wish of the league, that every woman in Atlanta should feel that she will be cordially welcome at any time she should wish to be present.

An especially cordial invitation is issued to all women who have recently come to Atlanta to make it their home.

The luncheons are very informal and they offer an excellent opportunity to new comers to become acquainted with the life of the city. The luncheon fee is fifty cents. Reservations may be made with Mrs. J. T. Stephenson, Hemlock 2188-J.

MRS. HAMMOND TO ENTERTAIN CLUB.

The Atlanta Agnes Scott club will meet Tuesday afternoon, July 19, at 4 o'clock at the home of Mrs. P. W. Hammond, 217 Westminster drive. The regular program will be followed by an enjoyable social hour.

CALIFORNIAN IS DISTINGUISHED VISITOR.

Mrs. Ira C. Jones, of Los Angeles, Cal., is a prominent visitor in Atlanta this summer as the guest of her brother and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Frank West, at their home on West Peachtree street. Mrs. Jones, as Miss Gene West, spent her girlhood days in Atlanta, but went to California.

Many Atlantans Enjoying Attractions of Asheville

BY LOUISE DOOLY.

Asheville, N. C. July 16.—(Special.) Indoors and outdoors the birds are singing, canaries in their cages among the tropical plants that form an indoor garden of the corridor outside one's bedroom door, and all the free songsters of summertime out of doors weaving their chirping and their warbles with an occasional real peean of song into a happy chorus beyond one's windows.

One's eyes are filled, too, with rare refreshment, if city sights are what they are accustomed to; for there are the mountains in the near-distance, a city set on wooded hills, in the foreground, and right at hand the endless shades of green in a perfect golf course.

Sweet odors of grass and shrubs and flowers, wet not long ago with rain, feed another sense with pleasure, and while she is absorbing it all with an intensity of welcome that almost defeats one's real purpose of doing far niente, little fleeting thoughts recall scraps of conversation when city surroundings still shaped the angle of one's outlook.

Life's Perseverance. "Why must we always be wanting? Why must I, and all of us, follow a routine of life which is not our idea of what life should be? Echoes in one's ear in the voice of a woman, not querulous but wondering.

"My time is taken up," the voice goes on, "with the things I must do, the people I must see, the thoughts that hinge on these duties. And I see little of the people I most like to see; I so seldom do the things I like to do; I so seldom have the leisure for the thoughts I should like to dwell on."

The answer to her musings which all the intimate little groups reflected in their own experience, matter not so much, because every speaker, while she wondered, knew the reasons—lack of courage to be different, or more frequently, the grim and unpleasing necessity of making three meals a day. Up here it is easier to be the kind of human being one was probably born to be. Nature is kinder and more inviting. The cares of the world are safely, for the time being, at a distance. The little worries are not nerve-racking. The line between one's eyes that comes in straining to see through the mists of the mountains a peak that was quite apparent in the clearer atmosphere of yesterday, is not a line that lingers like the one that grows out of pouring every way at once for an outlet through the ill-handled frame of a city street.

There may be those, of course, who even here in the midst of beauty and a placidly rare in these days of hurry and the striving after artificial ends, let worldliness hold them in its accustomed possession. But as a rule, one can be oneself untroubled, or perhaps, more correctly speaking, better than oneself.

Motor Tourists. North Carolina has not had the deluge rains this summer which interfered last year with motor travel, and no Asheville again comes a suburb of southern cities as far away as Atlanta, which sends their motorists in a day's ride right into the highest mountains in the Appalachian system.

Here at Grove Park Inn the week-ends are like small corners of Atlanta, and familiar figures step out of tourist cars any day for real visits.

Mr. and Mrs. Lowry Arnold motored up Tuesday and are guests at the Inn, finding Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Woodruff, Mrs. George Calhoun Walters, Mr. and Mrs. Alex McDougall Bridges, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Grady, already here. Mr. and Mrs. Buelow Campbell and their party, including a daughter, Virginia, arrived the next day to join Mrs. Campbell's sister, Mr. Alex. Bonnyman, of Asheville. Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Black arrived Thursday.

Mr. and Mrs. Woodruff and Mrs. Walters went home early in the week, but will return to spend the week at the Inn. Mr. and Mrs. John E. Murphy, Miss Murphy and Miss Katherine Murphy, coming for a week-end, remained over.

Other Prominent Visitors. Other prominent southerners now at the Inn who are well known in Atlanta are George Gordon Crawford, of Birmingham; Mrs. Victor Hanson, of Birmingham; Thomas Barrett, Jr., and Lansing Lee, of Augusta; Major and Mrs. Stahman, of Nashville; Mr. and Mrs. Jordan Massee, of Macon, who have a beautiful cottage on Sunset mountain, not far from the home of Mr. and Mrs. F. L. Seely, are frequent visitors at the Inn.

Mr. and Mrs. John D. Little, of Atlanta, have a cottage here for the summer, and are taking active part in Asheville's social life.

Lovers Golf Record. The golfing contingent at the Inn saw Perry Adair, who was recently at the Battery Park hotel with his bride, broke the amateur record for the Asheville Country club golf course during the week-end. Adair, made on his first try over the links. Mr. and Mrs. Billups Philmy, of Atlanta, are prominent golfers who will spend August at the Inn, and week-end trips or longer visits are planned by Mrs. Lynne S. Elwin, Mr. and Mrs. John D. Little and many others.

Susan Coe, for many years America's most famous dictator of health and beauty, is here, especially those who are unhappy because they are too fat, and those others whose weight is a source of trouble. She has been spending several days at the Inn, preparatory to the opening of the International Training camp for women, of which she is director. The camp this year is on the Swannanoa river, near the home of Mrs. T. W. Bickett, wife of the former governor of North Carolina, who is a delegate to represent the value of the training camp, and entering last year as a "rookie," won her commission.

Returns to Atlanta. Mrs. Sam W. Wilkes has returned to her home at the Ponce de Leon apartments after a month's absence at her plantation near Senoia, Ga.

forms a number of years ago, where she studied the kindergarten course and graduated from the school in Los Angeles.

Since her graduation, Mrs. Jones has been teaching in the public school system of that city, and is among the most efficient and capable teachers in the long list. She was sent as a delegate to represent the Kindergarten Department of work by the Los Angeles City Teachers' club, which is composed of 1,800 elementary teachers, to the National Educators' association, which met at Des Moines, Iowa, inclusive. There were 28 delegates to this meeting from Los Angeles, a city of 400,000 people.

The club, beautifully situated, is always bright with flowers, ferns and shrubbery. The terrace is a great attraction, with its setting of lovely garden flowers.

Dinner was served at 6 o'clock last evening on tables encircling the terrace, a number of parties being given for out-of-town visitors. At least two hundred guests enjoyed the dinner, assembling many bright groups among the social set.

Rev. Israel H. Noe To Assume Duties At Memphis Church

Rev. Israel H. Noe, rector of the Church of the Incarnation, will leave Atlanta late in August for Memphis, Tenn., where he will assume the duties of dean of St. Mary's cathedral, one of the Tennessee city's largest and most influential Episcopal churches.

REV. ISRAEL H. NOE, Memphis, Tenn., where he will assume the duties of dean of St. Mary's cathedral.

Rev. Noe has been in Atlanta as rector of the Church of the Incarnation for four years and during his residence here has won for himself a large and loyal group of friends. His connection with the local church has been declared commendable, since the membership of the church has doubled during his rectorship and the financial budget has been trebled during the same period.

Rev. Noe is an honor graduate of the University of the South at Sewanee, Tenn., having been a member of the class of 1911. He is 39 years of age, born in North Carolina in 1881.

The call which Rev. Noe has accepted from the Memphis church is considered a distinct compliment to his ability. The church there has a large plant which consists of the bishop's residence, the cathedral proper, a cathedral school for girls, a free kindergarten and deacons' hall. It is expected that the new dean will complete the male cathedral structure. Bishop Sallick, whom Rev. Noe will work in his new charge, is the present bishop of the Episcopal church.

No successor has yet been decided upon for the rectorship of the Church of the Incarnation here, but it is expected that one will be named before long. The present pastor to take up his new duties in Memphis, September 1.

Nora Stirling Home on Vacation, after Interesting Year on Stage

Photographs by Walton Reeves.

The photographs in this group show Miss Nora Stirling portraying the costume parts in the various plays produced by the Toledo Theater company during the past season. At the upper left she appears as Dorothy Fessenden, the character made famous by Vivian Tobin in "On The Hiring Line." All of the pictures made in the plaid gown represent Miss Stirling as Alice Chesterton, the part which was given the late Olive Thomas when the manuscript was changed so as to make her the star of "Upstairs and Down," in which Miss Stirling plays the adorable ingenue part. In the picture on the lower left, where she wears the Peter Thompson suit, she played as Irene Trevor, in "Seven Chances." She was a member of the Toledo Theater company for ten months and played a most successful engagement.

Critics Loud in Praise of Atlanta Girl's Talent

BY BESSIE SHAW STAFFORD.

In adopting the stage as a profession, Miss Nora Stirling has followed the rule which appears to be one accepted by many Atlanta women who have also chosen careers under the muses Thalia, Melpomene or Terpsichore, and have preferred their own names to appear on the theater program. In regard to this, Miss Stirling gave as her reasons for keeping her real name in her work that there were no other actresses having Stirling as a surname; the two names are euphonious; she is also very proud of her name, and that Miss Alexa Stirling, her sister, has given the name unusual prestige throughout the country.

She is now visiting her parents, Dr. and Mrs. A. W. Stirling, at East Lake, after ten months of study and appearing before audiences in the character parts of an ingenue in the Toledo Theater company.

Long before Miss Stirling graduated from Washington seminary she knew and announced that she wanted to be an actress. Her father and mother supported her in her desire, and are both just as enthusiastic as their daughter over her success. By this action on the part of her parents, she has never had any feeling but the one that she would undoubtedly succeed.

After leaving the seminary she ventured to New York, and with her went Mrs. Stirling and Alexa, who stayed there while she played a small part in "The Treasure," as put on at the Garrick theater by the Theater Guild, after persuading this prominent organization that she was in earnest about her stage work.

Miss Stirling had just graduated from Madam Alberti's Dramatic school in New York. Madam Alberti was also the teacher of Stewart Walker, who presented the Portmanteau Players, with Harold Holstein as the manager. In order that Mr. Holstein could judge her voice enunciation and the quality of her acting she worked up into a monologue the death scene from Madam Butterfly as a tragic part, while for her comedy act she wrote and did a monologue portraying a negro boy of 12, who was most forgetful, the son of a cook for the Stirling family at East Lake, who had been the cause of much laughter and comedy before Miss Stirling left home.

She also read with Mr. Holstein "You Never Can Tell," by Bernard Shaw. After the hearing, he engaged her for the ingenue in his Toledo Theater company, and she played

"LIVE AND LET LIVE," PHOTOPLAY AT HOWARD

Tells Interesting Story of Blue Sundays and Blue Lives.

"Blue Sundays" and "Blue lives" are strikingly painted in "Live and Let Live," the Cabanne special, a picture filled with truthful incidents of everyday existence, which comes to the Howard theater for the first three days of this week.

It brings to the minds of all who see it, the lives which a delegation from Nashville, Tenn., is now planning to put before the members of congress, which would let a man "kiss his wife on Sunday, play with the babies, enjoy the fresh breeze, and read a book, if it's the proper kind."

And the kind of existence they must live in Zion City, where the peek-a-boo is barred and special regulations made for the dresses of women—even the color of ribbon they may wear.

It's a story of everyday life in many homes, where the man tries to make everybody's life the kind of life he lives, and generally ends in a snafu for all he loves as well as for himself.

It introduces Mary Ryan, a cultured, talented and pretty girl who loves innocent pleasures. But she has made a mistake—a stolen purse, and horrified over the offense resolves to go to another town and start things over again.

Circumstances give her a chance to impersonate another girl, and to enter the home of Judge Loomis, where she is welcomed as a niece. But such a home she had never imagined.

From it sunlight is shut out; happiness is deemed a crime. She finds that her skirts are too short to suit the uncle; she learns that it is a crime to sing on Sunday—even though she sings because she is happy and "the birds are singing too," she finds that Sunday baseball is abominable; and that dances are all taboo.

And out of the narrowness of mind and the autocracy of the man over his own family as well as of the town, comes disgrace and ruin for the family of the man who has been dancing Sunday baseball and even singing on the Sabbath day.

It is not until the hand of misfortune is placed upon his own shoulder, however, that Judge Loomis realizes the errors of his way—the folly of forbidding innocent pleasures.

His son a thief; his son's fiancée a suicide; his daughter, already crippled, injured and blind, is the result of the errors of his way.

Use Old Heirlooms.
Los Angeles homes, stores, curio shops and antique dealers have been raided in the quest of antiques and curious bits of old forgotten things that will be seen in Bert Lytell's newest Metro picture, "Junk," a Maxwell Karger production now being filmed at Metro's Hollywood studios. The wealth of discarded human belongings that has found its way into this unique film will prove one of the surprises of the picture.

Ruth Renick.
Ruth Renick, who plays a leading role in "The Golden Snare," from a James Oliver Curwood story, is a blonde, has pretty hazel eyes and is 5 feet 2 inches in height. She was born in Galveston, Texas, and educated in Texas and Arizona. She was a successful stage actress before engaging in pictures.

ROSEMARY THEBY IS METROPOLITAN STAR

Appears in "Good Women."
Other Features on the Week's Program.

An attractive program ushers in the third week at the new Metropolitan theater. There is an excellent production in "Good Women," a new two-reel comedy, the usual interesting news weekly, and a tangle of events. But the bright particular feature will be Dave Love's violin solo. And because it is the first time he has appeared in a solo for many months, the occasion is sure to be one of significance. Mr. Love has chosen Fritz Kreisler's "Caprice Viennoise."

It is recommended enough of "Good Women" to say that Gansler produced it, and Rosemary Theby stars in it. The combination is one to inspire confidence. "Good Women" is from an original story by C. Gardner Sullivan and it affords Rosemary Theby a splendid vehicle for her beauty, vivacity and histrionic ability.

Essentially the story has to do with the individual who believes that his or her life can be lived without any regard for the conventions that govern society and color human conduct. Rosemary Theby has the role of Katherine Brinkley, a young American heiress, whose views of social responsibility are distorted into the belief that she has the right to find her own happiness whatever the sacrifice that may entail upon some one else.

In the pursuit of her happiness she flounces herself in love with Nicolas Broutch, a brilliant Russian pianist and social lion, and the temperamental artist encourages her folly to the end that he desires his wife and goes to Italy with Katherine.

There is an interval when both tread the red glare of the lurid bonfire and then Nicolas tires of successive stages of disillusionment, self-pity and remorse before she realizes that under existing social conditions the only real happiness is found in sane, normal living, and that within the well-ordered circle of conventions.

There is a really genuine love which comes into her life standing out in striking contrast to the lurid some fanned by Nicolas' infatuation, and redeeming the folly of her misguided judgment.

Much has been done to make the story attractive. The settings are well chosen, the scenes are beautiful, the action is smooth and logical, and without any suggestion of the melodramatic the story deals tactfully with a subject that never loses its interest.

New Release.
It is reported that Lois Weber will release her pictures through a new firm of which Wild Gunning and Fred Warren are at the head. The units five producing in this country and one in Europe. Lois Weber and Will Rogers are the only members announced as yet, and each will, according to present plans, produce four pictures each year.

Custer's Last Stand.
Marshall Neilan's "Bob Hampton of Placer" will be shown at the anniversary of the Custer battle to be held soon at Hardisty. "Custer's Last Stand" is the big scenic feature of the picture.

Facts for Maidens Who Yearn for Screen Fame

BY HELEN JEROME EDDY.
Hollywood is coming to be a place of "rapid" existence—although there are usually two persons coming in to one person going out.

But the moving picture profession is changing, and, naturally, in its readjustment, there are bound to occur many peculiar and unusual things.

Among the interesting developments that have happened in the reorganizing of the fifth largest industry in the United States are the smashing of many egos, the down-fall of much conceit. This is an upward look for art and the safe and sane evolution of the silent dramas forced to be reckoned with for generations still to come.

To the ranks of the profession have drifted great numbers of young men and women who have "got in" solely on their faces or on their ability to dance. These are being weeded out, and those remaining will be found to be the serious, ardent conscientious workers who have at once ability and talent for acting.

So, you can see, girls, wherever you are and whoever you happen to be, that your chance for winning in this interesting new game is slightly less than it was a year or two ago.

The case of Mildred Small has lately come under my observation. Mildred really belongs in a pretty bungalow with a nice workman husband and two or three pretty babies.

But she doesn't know that, because you see, when she was in high school she was a star in the local dramatic effort of the season, and she "went over" with a "bang."

This caused her to believe that India was not alone to be the home of the greatest number of successful writers, but also the birthplace of the American Bernard.

Poor little dear, how could she realize that the home town folks were not inclined to be critical, that they all loved her and would be delighted with almost anything she did, because she was such a sweet, pretty young girl?

Anyway, Mildred came to Hollywood, although the parents were not in this case called upon to make any great sacrifice for her.

But she spent many lonely, unprofitable days trying to get inside a studio, and finally she became an extra girl, working for the usual sum.

The days flowed into weeks, the weeks into months, and for two years little Mildred has been working intermittently as an extra.

Her life is far from pleasant, because with many of the persons she meets and having an unusually respectable background, and being very careful of her reputation, she is distinctly reserved, because she is so far from home and alone.

She keeps hoping to be given a part, and she eagerly reads reports of the girls who are now starting and who were once extras.

What she does not realize, is that the girls who have risen from the ranks of the extras and who are now either leading women or stars, have had something distinctly unusual to recommend them; either they have been noticed for their type or for their ability to do even better than the extras, or they have possessed some special quality that has attracted someone else to call them to the attention of a casting director.

This is a colorless story, with as yet no ending, but words are inadequate to describe the disappointment.

In that part of the picture where Arbuckle as Monte Brewster starts a fake fire in his home at a lavish reception and taking the fire hose onto a balcony, thoroughly drenches all his guests so that he will have to spend a large sum replacing their gowns. The gowns were in reality very costly and several thousand dollars of materials were ruined during the filming of those scenes.

Gareth Hughes in Aeroplans.
An aeroplane flight will be one of the features of "Garments of Truth," a Metro production now in the making, with Gareth Hughes in the stellar role. All who witness the flight class it as a daring stunt.

There is a tremendous saving in the designing and making of gowns right in the studio. In the production of gowns for just 50 per cent as much as similar imported gowns, would cost brought into the studio and imported.

The gowns made for all feminine stars and leading women are held from sixty to ninety days after the picture is finished and in many cases they are held until the picture is released, when they are often used for special explorations.

At the opening of Elsie Ferguson's latest picture, "Sacred and Profane Love," the most elaborate gown worn by Miss Ferguson was sent to New York and worn on the stage in a prologue put on by the picture.

No gown of this sort is ever used in another picture, but the materials are used over and over again.

They strive constantly, however, to keep waste to a minimum and to get all the possible use out of every piece of cloth or trimming which is brought into the wardrobe stock.

Even such little things as flower trimmings are used again and when they begin to fade they are dyed black. The biggest item on our list of account is that caused by the use of gowns in water scenes—scenes in which the players and gowns are unkindly or drenched by water. In such a scene the gown is almost invariably ruined and the materials have to be discarded. An example of such a scene will be recalled by all who saw Rose Arbuckle's Paramount picture, "Brewster's Millions."

Gowns Constitute One of Costliest Items in Studio

One thousand dollars for a single gown.
This item, representing the cost of only one of the fashion creations worn by one star in a Paramount picture, will perhaps serve to impress in patrons with the importance of the economic phase of motion picture costuming and design.

The producers want gorgeous and exquisite gowns for the feminine players in appropriate scenes of modern productions; therefore, they place no limitations on their designers in their choice and use of the most valuable materials, the designing and creation of these gowns constituted one of the most costly items on the studio's budget.

In order to justify this enormous expense, the economic phase of this work is very carefully considered and a policy of the strictest conservation of materials is adhered to.

"We do not waste so much as a button or a scrap of cloth," observes Ethel Chaffin, chief designer of the gowns worn by the stars and leading players in Paramount Pictures produced at the Lasky studio in Hollywood. "We secure the best fabrics obtainable and get all the new weaves as soon as they are out, buying staple goods direct from the factories and novelties direct from the importers. At the beginning of each picture I estimate the probable cost of the gowns which will be required. There is no standard figure which will represent the cost of gowns for any single picture. It varies, of course, with the number and quality of gowns required."

"I have made up dresses for a single picture, beginning in Miss Ferguson's picture, 'The Sign of the Cross' way from fifteen dollars to several thousand dollars a dress. The Gloria Swanson picture, 'The Sign of the Cross,' began with very simple clothes, but finished with a gown of pearls, white would cost several thousand dollars in any exclusive shop. The total cost of gowns in that picture, worn by Miss Ferguson, was about ten thousand dollars. Many are under the impression that the stars and principals furnish their own gowns. This is not so in the case of the player in Paramount Pictures."

DWAN PRODUCTION AT THE CRITERION

Program.

Heading the Criterion's program for the week is Allan Dwan's production, "In the Heart of a Fool," based on the novel by William Allen White.

The comedy feature of the bill is Buster Keaton in his latest riot of mirth, "The Goat," wherein it is said that this droll comedian surpasses his former highly successful efforts. Kinograms, the brightest news weekly in the forum, will have its usual place on the bill, and the Criterion orchestra will furnish the musical background that has come to be one of the features of the entertainment in that house.

In the Heart of a Fool is the story of the love of two young people, which temporarily goes astray through misunderstanding. Then a pirate enters their lives—one of those individuals who is a menace to society, but whose unworthy motive and deep desires are hidden under a cloak of seeming respectability.

Another disorganizing influence in the person of a lovely and too ambitious woman, comes upon the scene and a mighty drama of love and distress; of hope and disillusionment is worked out in the little stage of life.

Through a mighty fire in a coal mine, and a thrilling encounter with a paid mob of strike-breakers, the hero and the heroine are united. While big in its treatment, the story is impressive, from the fact that it deals with characters from every class of life—people we all know.

"In the Heart of a Fool" is a dramatization of William Allen White's powerful novel of American life. A strong cast interprets the principal roles. It is headed by James Kirkwood, Anna O. Nilsson, Mary Thurman and Philo McCullough.

The dark, pliant beauty of Mary Thurman shows in striking contrast to the queenly blonde beauty of the statuesque Anna O. Nilsson. Each is a perfect foil for the other, and it is interesting to note that it is the beautiful blonde who has the role of the vampire, where custom has almost invariably made her a brunette.

ments, the heart-aches of Mildred Small, who dislikes to go home and admit defeat so long as she can earn a precarious living in the "movies."

There are hundreds of Mildreds who have come and gone.

If you expect to come into fame and fortune by this route, do not be misled.

The way of the "extra" seldom opens the door to stardom.

If you are content to make a living that is at once uncertain and distinctly small, then this branch of the industry might offer an avenue, but the number of "extras" who have made good will be fewer in the future than they have been in the past, because the industry is demanding better acting and more talent all the time.

Mildred Harris Pleases.

Mildred Harris has pleased Cecil B. deMille so well in her first picture under his direction that he has engaged her for his next Paramount film, the shooting of which will begin some time in August.

In fact, Mildred has pleased almost everyone on the Lasky lot, and certain publicity hounds connected with the organization are calling her "Lady Exquisite," and "a Twentieth Century Gainsborough." Here is the why for the latter appellation: "For that is exactly the impression one gains on meeting this screen player who has become so well known in the public press."

Her sheer, cool beauty and an atmosphere of patrician aloofness might well have been taken direct from an art gallery—with modern instincts in dress and manners added for the means of the picture.

The intensive newspaper discussion that has come to Mildred has brought forth many conjectures as to her appearance. Some have guessed her diminutive, "baby doll" type; others see her as a statuesque Amazon. To the contrary, however, Mildred is neither.

"She is more my 'Lady Exquisite' of some Parisian drawing room—for it is in a perfection of grooming that Mildred excels," says the before-alluded-to publicity hound.

"The Exquisite" of Mildred Harris, that sense for a projection of sheer physical beauty is said to be well placed in the leading role she has in Cecil B. deMille's new production for Paramount, "Fool's Paradise."

Edith Kennedy will write the continuity for Viola Dana's forthcoming Metro picture, "The Fourteenth Lover." Until recently Miss Kennedy was a writer of original stories, and continues for Famous Players-Lasky in private life. Kennedy is Mrs. Albert D. Jewett.

"WHISPERING DEVILS" Attraction at Tudor

A photoplay that is refreshing to the motion picture public that has been fed on sugar-coated tales that are all honey and milk, and leave the mind empty of substance after the picture has been seen, comes to the Tudor Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday under the title, "Whispering Devils," a six-reel photodrama that is all meat and in which the author, Henry Arthur Jones, and the stars, Conway Tearle and Rosemary Theby, score another triumph for better motion pictures.

Much has been preached on the subject of honesty and clean living—many sermons have been launched against hyppocrits and unbridled passion, but it takes a picture with the punch and power of "Whispering Devils" to bring the message home with telling force. The action depicted hides nothing. It does not leave the spectator in the air, to guess for himself what the author is driving at. By a series of the tensest dramatic situations, in which Tearle makes a remarkable display of his artistic ability, the meaning of the story appears as plain as day. Not a soul will fail to sympathize with the temptation of Michael Penversham, in his tremendous struggle to escape the maddening will of the enchanting Audrey Loden. Not a man who has ever faced a similar problem will fail to see enacted before his eyes a chapter of his own life. The people that appear in "Whispering Devils" are of flesh and blood, not puppets and paper dolls. They love and hate like human beings. They undergo the same trials as we have undergone in our own experience.

The conclusion of the story is a genuine satisfaction to those who distrust the man who preaches much and practices little—the man whose God is in the sky, not in his heart. It has a genuine "surprise finish" that only adds to the excellence of this wholesome, intense photoplay.

An account of Henry Arthur Jones' creation in "Whispering Devils" would be incomplete if we failed to mention the richness of setting and the colorful scenes that form the background of this human story. The landscape selected is massive—most of the action takes place amid the vast stretches of forest and moor with mighty mountains in the dim distance, surrounding a lonely isle, where the climax of the story takes place.

"Assault and Battery."
Teddy Sampson and Henry Murdock are the principals in the case of "Assault and Battery," which is the succinct title of a new Gaiety comedy on which Director Frederick Sullivan is starting at the Christie studios. Murdock doing the flaring and Miss Sampson the heavy punning. As the title would indicate, the film is a domestic monologue. Murdock doesn't speak a title in the whole picture.

Writing for Viola Dana.

TO DECIDE FATE OF HANSON BILL

Public Property Committee of Senate—Review of This Week's Activities.

Looking over the work of the senate and its committees during the past week the following main features are seen: Passage of the bill by Senator John H. Jones of the 37th providing for an Australian ballot system with an amendment making it apply only to counties wishing it; passage of the Fleming-Jones bill calling for the reading of the Bible in the schools of the state with the provision that parents objecting may have their children excused; defeat of the resolution introduced by advocates of the Macdonald capital removal agitation calling for an investigation of the local business and professional men and women of the negro race are expected to be the most important features of this week's activities.

Next week it is expected that the senate will be thrown in high gear and much progress made in grinding out legislation. On Monday afternoon at 3:30 the appropriations committee will have an important meeting at which the bill to abolish the present system of ad valorem taxation and substitute a state income tax will be taken up. This bill provides for a 1 percent output of public utility corporations, a tax on the output of all domestic and foreign corporations and a tax on incomes. The meeting is expected to be largely attended as the bill will affect all persons in the state paying taxes.

Manassah Bill Meeting.
A meeting of the public property committee will also be held Monday afternoon at 3:30 to consider the bill to reach a decision on the bill by Senator Harrison of the 40th providing for the sale of the present governor's mansion and purchase of a new mansion, with the surplus from the sale going to pay the bonded debt of the state. Important bills have been introduced in the senate by Senator Akin of the 4th and Weaver of the 11th, which will come up for passage during the week. The bill by Senator Akin provides for the issuance of non-par stock by Georgia corporations and the incorporation of companies in the state with the provision that they may issue non-par stock. Senator Akin has pointed out the fact that the state is losing the taxes that should be collected from many corporations doing business in the state on account of antiquated corporation laws. These large corporations that should rightly be incorporated in the state, he declared, go to some other state to be incorporated so they may issue non-par stock.

How Won And How Lost The Fight Between Dempsey and Carpenter

Dempsey says, Nuxated Iron used by him as part of his training was in his opinion an important factor of his phenomenal victory over Carpenter as he believes it materially helped to give him that mighty power to withstand Carpenter's hardest hits and that it also helped to put added punch behind his own blows.

In the great fight Carpenter hit Dempsey with swift powerful blows that had the speed of gun fire. The yelling mob saw him land his famous right on Dempsey's jaw, yet Dempsey never flinched but relentlessly before after the Frenchman with his old rising tearing, merciless power, landing terrific punches on head, body and jaw until Carpenter quickly weakened and then another powerful punch and again Dempsey showed himself to be the superman of the age—the greatest Champion the world has ever known.

The London Daily Mail, of July 4th, quotes Carpenter as saying "Dempsey is the most powerful man I have ever met in the ring. He is incredibly strong. To hit him is like hitting the wall of an avalanche. If I were asked what led to my defeat, I would say the two tremendous blows Dempsey landed on the side of my neck. I was not the same after that."

Dempsey says, "I feel I was through greater power, endurance, fighting skill and strategy. I took Carpenter's hardest blows on my chin and while they knocked me back they did not do me in the least. I can run as fast as a horse and I have the endurance to stand the hardest blows that I can stand, neither has he the strength to deliver them. I understand his methods of training are entirely different from mine. While I believe in scientific boxing still I never lose sight of the important fact that other things being equal it is the man who has the greatest strength, power and endurance that is going to win. In building up these three most important things there is nothing like filling your blood with good old strength-giving iron. In preparing for my great fight with Willard I used Nuxated Iron as part of my training, and I felt that it was such a benefit to me that afterwards I used it, whenever I felt I was not quite up to the mark, to help restore my strength, energy and vigor and when I commenced training for my fight with Carpenter, the supreme test of my life, I again took Nuxated Iron and

Bishop W. A. Fountain, of the A. M. E. church, who has recently returned from an extensive trip to South America and the West Indies, will be the principal speaker at the men's meeting to be held at the Young Men's Christian association, Butler street, Sunday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock. The bishop has many interesting and timely remarks with reference to his observations of the church, as well as the social and economic conditions of the negro people in South America. A large attendance is expected at this hour to hear Bishop Fountain.

The approach of no convention in this city among colored people has ever been characterized with more enthusiasm and real genuine interest and concern than the coming session of the National Negro Business league, which is to meet here July 12, 13 and 14. This organization was founded by the late Robert T. Washington, and is now presided over by his successor, Dr. B. R. Moton, principal of Tuskegee institute. Upwards of one thousand of the most representative business and professional men and women of the negro race are expected to be present at the convention. Extensive plans are being made to house and otherwise entertain the delegates and to give them the various committees. Letters are being sent to the leading citizens both white and colored, asking them to subscribe towards the financial support of this convention. Generous response are already coming in.

The business delegation, of which Jesse O. Thomas is chairman, is launching their campaign for the abolition of the present tax equalization system. Persons desiring to take delegates to the convention should apply to the chairman, 200 Auburn avenue, indicating the number of delegates they wish to send.

The Anti-Tuberculosis league organized on last Wednesday night, July 12, at the A. M. E. church, Dr. J. R. Hamilton was elected president. This was a very enthusiastic meeting and great activities are expected from this organization. The "unstopable" H. E. Perry, organizer, has been elected to a new page in the financial history of the negro of America in the organization of the Citizens Trust company of this city, capitalized at $100,000. The organization of this enterprise will mean to the negro men and women who are trying to get homes and own farms or to develop the property and improve the land in their hands, as well as to extend an opening for a large number of employees of the negro race to take the initiative in the business world.

Field Secretary Jesse O. Thomas left the city last night for New York, Albany, Saratoga Springs, Rochester, Syracuse, Buffalo, Idaho, Michigan and Chicago on a business trip.

Professor E. T. Harvey, of Morehouse college, has written a paper to be given by the school children of the city together with some of the young men of the city, at the annual meeting of the Auditorium Armory, August 23. The music will be handled by the Professor Komper Herald, of Morehouse college. It will be remembered that Professor Harvey wrote a play, "Choosing the Better Part," that was given in the Auditorium Armory some years ago and that was so pleasing in its interpretation and rendition that the white people requested them to repeat it, offering to take the entire lower floor at 50 cents per seat. A great success.

In an effort to solve the employer and employee problem which has at times confronted most all of our citizens, Financial Secretary E. M. Foley has planned to open an employment office in room 313, Odd fellows building, 200 Auburn avenue.

The object of this office will be to have registered domestic help who are worthy, honest and willing to work, who are able to give references from their former employers, and who might get in touch with said employer and find out if the employee gave satisfactory service while in their employ. If their services were all right, they will be registered and recommended to some other job.

All persons in the field for good competent servants just call Placement Secretary E. M. Foley and she will look after your wants.

The annual meeting and exhibition of the American Chemical Society, opening in New York city in early September, promises to be the most important gathering in the history of the industry. The meeting will be attended by almost the entire membership of the society, which totals 15,500, together with delegations from Canada, Great Britain and several of the South American countries.

Jack Kearns Dempsey's Manager, says "Knowing that Nuxated Iron had done for Dempsey in the Willard fight I strongly insisted that he use this wonderful strength and blood builder as a part of his training for the fight with Carpenter, and I believe it was an important factor in building up Dempsey's superhuman strength, power and endurance which were such important factors in winning his easy victory."

SOFT DRINK MAKERS PROTEST STATE TAX FOR GOVERNMENT OWN.

Declare Imposition of New Levy Would Defeat Own Purpose.

The recent announcement by Chairman Daboss of the house appropriations committee, that the new revenue measure to be introduced would include a tax of one cent a bottle on all soda water or soft drinks, as well as a tax on soft drinks sold at restaurants, has aroused Georgia bottlers and fountain owners all over the state, who are protesting vigorously against what they state to be the gross injustice of the proposed tax. Bottlers point out that they are already paying to the federal government ten percent of their gross sales, besides all the other taxes paid by men in business, as well as a special tax on their bottle filling machines, which, of course, is not levied on men in other business.

The addition of a cent a bottle, or any other amount, to the cost of soft drinks would have to be paid by the consumer, the bottlers state, because they are already working on such a close margin that there is not a cent to spare. They allege that the burden of the tax would fall on the consumer, and that the increase in price, which could not be less than one cent on the bottle, would cut the consumption of soft drinks in half, forcing business and defeating the very purpose aimed at, namely, the increase in revenue. The paper, published in Atlanta, said:

Comes From Ignorance.
The proposal to place an additional tax on the soft drink bottling industry can only come from lack of knowledge of the situation and a complete lack of understanding of the industry. We do not believe that members of the Georgia legislature, who are supposed to be men of business, or do him any injustice, and we are certain that when the real facts are brought to the attention of the men at the capitol, we shall hear no more of the suggestion that bottlers pay a special tax.

When Governor Hardwick (then Senator Hardwick) appeared before the ways and means committee of the United States house of representatives in December, last, as special attorney for the American Bottlers of Carbonated Beverages, he gave strong reasons why the federal tax of ten per cent on bottled soft drinks should be removed, and these reasons were so strong against the levying of a special state tax on bottlers, because they are still paying the federal tax.

Against the proposed federal tax then in existence, then Senator Hardwick argued that this tax cannot be absorbed by the manufacturer, as demonstrated by the fact that the price of soft drinks has been passed to the consumer and consequently must raise the price to the consumer. He stated that the price necessarily tends to curtail the volume of business and to destroy the industry.

Principle Wrong.
"He said further that 'the basic principle of the tax is wrong because it imposes a heavy sales tax upon certain businesses and industries not imposed on all other businesses and industries. If congress proposes to impose a general sales tax upon American business and industry generally, the bottlers of carbonated beverages ought, of course, to be included in such tax and pay the same as any other business. But it is manifestly unfair and inequitable to impose very heavy sales tax upon just a few selected industries while exempting all other businesses and industry therefrom.'

He also argued that 'the particular tax imposed upon the bottlers of the Revenue Act of 1919, is wrong in principle because the tax falls upon the consumer and not upon the producer. It is a burden upon the consumer and has the effect of making these popular beverages out of five-cent sales with the golden rule. Above all, he is wholly honest, conscientious, fair alike to the rich and the poor. He is a student of the eternal principles of the Christian religion, and a friend to mankind. He has never cared to accumulate money, but, rather, has been content to live on his salary as a public servant and as one who loves his state.

General Harvey Hannah is to be the only man who possesses all of the qualifications requisite to success. He knows in advance just what the opposition will say and do. He knows the strength of the East Tennessee republican organization, and he knows where its weaknesses lie, while at the same time he has abundant confidence in his own strength and commands the admiration of the voters in middle and west Tennessee. In campaigns gone by he has on several occasions, voluntarily stepped aside rather than oppose a friend it is his nature to be more than he asks. But in the present crisis his friends are unanimous in their belief that he is the only democrat in Tennessee who can defeat the republican party. He will not only give way in favor of another, also, it happens well known to him, that he feels that his services have been drafted by the Volunteer state, and he has determined to put up a fight that will restore control of Tennessee to the dominant party.

General Harvey Hannah, coupled with the sincere wish that his ambitions may be realized."

BOYNTON NAMED TO OGLETHORPE FOUNDERS' BOARD

The executive committee of Oglethorpe university announced Saturday that George H. Boynton has been elected to and has accepted a seat on the board of founders of the university.

This board of founders is a unique organization composed of a group of educators and philanthropists who administer the affairs of Oglethorpe university and who are known as the founders of that institution.

The association of Mr. Boynton with this board is of special interest in that he is well known as one of the leaders of the Atlanta-Bacon-Norfolk movement, which has intimate historic associations with Oglethorpe. It will be recalled that the distance and tiresome horseback and carriage rides between Georgia and Princeton first suggested the building of a "Southern Princeton" which, having been destroyed during the war between the states, is now being rebuilt in Atlanta. The president of Oglethorpe university and S. M. Inman, one of its most liberal benefactors, were both Princeton men, and associated with these points of interest are many others so that Mr. Boynton, in a sense, is following the traditions of his alma mater in devoting part of his time to the interests of Oglethorpe.

Demand for Oil A Strike Result In Great Britain

Coaling Stations of the Empire to Be Turned Into Oil Stations.

The London correspondent of the Guaranty Trust company of New York reports that from an American point of view the most important result of the British coal strike is the permanent increase in the use of oil for fuel. The civil lord of the admiralty recently stated in the house of commons that the fleet of Great Britain in a very short time would consist solely of oil burning ships. Its coaling stations at home and throughout the empire are to be turned into oil stations, and there will be installations at the Cape of Good Hope, the Falkland Islands, Gibraltar, Hongkong, Port Said and other strategic points.

It was evident that the feeling of the house of commons, generally, was "all for oil." Incidentally, it was pointed out that if the British navy were to discard coal and use oil as the sole propulsive power, adequate reserves of oil would be absolutely essential, and the British government had, therefore, taken steps to secure these reserves by obtaining a controlling interest in the Anglo-Persian Oil company.

At the same session of parliament, Viscount Curzon asserted that the British destroyers could never have done their splendid work in the North sea in protecting the fleet during the war, being out all hours day and night in all weather, but for the speed with which they could run in and refill with oil fuel.

Another notable step in the ushering in of the oil age is the use of the British merchant marine of oil both for steam-raising and internal combustion engines. Oil is flowing into England from abroad in vast quantities and no less than 24,000,000 gallons were imported in the second week of May. Of this amount, 8,000,000 gallons were for the oil trade. It is a matter of fact that in the four months ending April, 1921, such imports into Great Britain reached a total of nearly 150,000,000 gallons compared with 86,700,000 gallons in the corresponding period in 1920. While this is naturally an excellent showing for the oil trade, it is a matter of serious concern for the British coal interests. As a result of the strike, foreign coal was shipped into England in very large quantities.

Retail Survey Shows Two Angles of Trade Decline

Dry Goods and Shoe Business Off 10 Per Cent in Volume, But 31 Per Cent in Dollars and Cents.

BY RUTH SANDERS,
Managing Editor The Dry Goodsman, St. Louis.

FOR some time past an accurate gauge of a retail business done by the territory at large has been lacking. This was due in large part to the decline in prices, which led to a paradoxical state of affairs in which a retailer might do a really more business but handle less money in the process.

It has been the object of this survey, just completed and reported here, to determine as nearly as possible the exact relation between the volume of sales as measured by disse. They indicate also what has been maintained before this—that stocks on hand are in good condition as a result of wise merchandising and that retailers will pursue the same policy of conservative buying and order only for more or less immediate needs.

The average declines for the whole territory—10 per cent in terms of merchandise and 31 per cent in terms of dollars and cents—are small indeed in view of reductions in market all the way from 31-3 to 75 per cent and even higher in some cases.

One retailer writes, "The business outlook for fall is good. Price confidence is greatly restored. Quality is wanted and people are beginning to realize that they need things."

"We are provided for such demands, believing that the merchant who has the goods will get the business. It's a matter of faith, but we're going to jump."

"Merchants cannot sell shoes or any other merchandise unless they have the styles and stock when the public demands them," says yet another. "My orders are placed so that new styles are being made up for me and I have something new every thirty days."

"Too many merchants are afraid to buy and are losing business. I have had an increase every year and expect a 15 per cent increase in dollars this year. That will mean a lot more merchandise sold."

There is a general feeling of confidence in the business outlook. A few are heavy on certain lines of winter

Question—Does your business show an increase or decrease over this time last year in amount of merchandise sold?
Answer—An average decline of 10 per cent.

Question—Does your business show an increase or decrease over this time last year in dollars and cents?
Answer—An average decline of 31 per cent.

Question—In what condition is your stock? Light? Heavy? Normal?

Answer—38 per cent report light stocks; 59 per cent report normal stocks, and 3 per cent report heavy stocks.

Question—How much more summer goods do you estimate you will need as fill-ins if present business keeps up?

Answer—27 per cent have all they need and will buy no more; 47 per cent specify they will need "very little," and the average for the rest is $2,000 in round figures.

Question—What percentage of your fall goods have you already bought?

Answer—More than 32 per cent state they have bought nothing for fall; an average of 31 per cent of their fall needs has been bought by the rest.

Question—Will you buy as much or more than last year? What percentage?

Answer—20 per cent will buy as much; a smaller percentage will buy even more, but the average for the entire territory, according to reports compiled, will be 82 per cent of last year's total.

Question—Are you coming to market? When?

Answer—The replies were practically unanimous in favor of coming, and the large majority will come to market during August.

Question—What is the business outlook for fall in your section?

Answer—34 per cent consider it good; 36 per cent consider fair; 3 per cent consider it uncertain, and 27 per cent consider it poor in their sections.

units or merchandise and by dollars and cents. The survey also aims to estimate present conditions of stocks on hand and to form a reliable opinion as to progress already made in buying for fall, as to buying yet to be done and as to what the rest of the trade thinks about the whole situation.

The results are given in this article. They indicate that while sales have brought in less money, they have moved more merchandise, but even there the case is far from hopeless. Business on summer merchandise is in sight, and naturally. As it is, judging both from market reports and from retail reports, the season has been extended by the onslaught of intense heat, and the demand for wash fabrics and garments is strong.

They indicate that a third of the merchants in the territory state they have placed no fall orders, while the rest have offered only about a third of their fall merchandise.

In most lines this condition will cause no trouble when orders eventually are placed, presumably beginning late this month. In other lines, noticeably shoes, there may be some inconvenience for retailers involved due to the sold-out condition of this line.

The shoe market states that it is making more shoes than ever before in its history, and a good deal of speculation is about as to what merchants who delay their shoe orders will do when it comes to getting delivery.

In the beginning at least, the trade will not call for as much fall merchandise as it did last year. We have the word of divers representative merchants that a different story may be told in the long run, but certain it is that to start the season off the trade is going to order only what it is sure must be in stock, and present reports put that amount at around 82 per cent of last year's orders.

Causes of Concern. Especially the prices on farm products, are causing the most concern as to the business outlook for fall. As a whole, the feeling is optimistic, but some of the states are practically unanimous in their belief that things are going to break mighty slow.

Six hundred returns out of a list of 3,500 retailers are taken as the basis for these conclusions. The entire southwest and the central south were covered in this survey as well as the southernmost states of Mississippi, Tennessee and Kentucky. For the benefit of dealers in the latter section more specific information can be gathered from the figures tabulated from these three states, as follows:

Mississippi Returns. Twenty-one per cent decline in merchandise sold; 33 per cent decline in dollars. Stocks for 56 per cent are light; 9 per cent, heavy; 35 per cent, normal. Thirty-one per cent have bought nothing for fall; 62 per cent have bought 27 per cent of their needs. Sixteen per cent will buy as much as last year; the rest, 10 per cent. Twenty-one per cent report good prospects; 50 per cent, poor; 11 per cent, uncertain; 18 per cent, fair.

Tennessee Returns. Seven per cent decline in merchandise sold; 32 per cent decline in dollars. Stocks for 44 per cent are light; 56 per cent, normal. Twenty-eight per cent have bought nothing for fall; the rest, 34 per cent on the average. They will buy 50 per cent as much as last year. Forty-seven per cent report fair prospects; 28 per cent, good; 19 per cent, uncertain; 8 per cent, poor.

Kentucky Returns. Six per cent increase in merchandise sold; 16 per cent decline in dollars. Stocks for 23 per cent are light; 2 per cent, heavy; 76 per cent, normal. Twenty per cent have bought nothing for fall; 80 per cent have bought 30 per cent of their needs. Twenty per cent will buy as much as last year; the rest, 87 per cent. Fifty per cent report good prospects; 34 per cent, fair; 8 per cent, uncertain; 8 per cent, poor.

commercial crooks who "steal by misrepresentation" and discourage on "Sectionalism."

Read and learn: Differences of opinion exist at present as to our dependence on foreign markets for the complete distribution of the commodities we are able to produce.

Our recent convention took the position that foreign markets are needed for the reaching of our maximum distribution and the renewal of prosperity. Trade does not follow the flag. Trade follows values and investments.

Turning back to our own history we find that a large share of the capital of the first and second banks of the United States came from abroad. From 1820 to 1837 the debts of excess of imports over exports were invested in our country, and from 1837 to 1857 the total foreign investment in our railways and other public facilities reached a total of about $1,500,000,000. Great Britain was looking after her trade in America and wanted to make it just as easy as she could for us to buy of her.

It is very foolish to believe that we can get everything and buy nothing. This is contrary to the natural law of trade, and as a creditor nation we must learn to buy as well as to sell. We must provide long term credits through institutions organized specially for the purpose under the Edge amendment to the federal reserve act. (1) We must prepare ourselves to invest abroad. (2) We must develop profitable foreign markets. (3) We must learn foreign credit technique in order that we may again reach our maximum distribution.

Commercial Crooks. The progress of the association in punishing the criminal offender in the commercial field has been attended with marked results and must have deterred many from taking up a line that once promised punishment but that now promises punishment.

It is our sincere hope that in addition to its success in the foregoing out and punishment of the offender it may serve the nation by building up a new commercial code and the bench and prosecuting attorneys that stealing commodities by misrepresentation is as great a crime against society and should be as severely dealt with as the forging of a check and banditry.

Sectionalism. Sectionalism has always been one of the greatest defects of our national life. In the first days of our history we find sections arrayed against one another. It was not what would serve the nation, but what would serve their particular sections that governed the political attitude of the people. In 1793 western Pennsylvania rose in opposition to an excise tax on whisky. An insurrection occurred that had to be suppressed by a military expedition. In 1832 South Carolina said that the tariff law of 1828 would not apply to that state and claimed the constitutional right of nullifying federal laws.

The consolidation of the nation in 1865 did not entirely unify it; one of our chief problems still is sectionalism. The advance of the frontier naturally created an antagonism between the pioneers and the people in the older parts of the country. There is no longer any frontier to the nation yet sectionalism still prevails. We must become a united nation and put our united support under national projects.

It matters not what the project may mean directly to you or me, but if it means the nation's welfare we should get back of it with all our heart. One section cannot profit at the expense of another. What benefits one section will benefit the whole; what hurts one section will hinder the whole. We cannot divorce ourselves from one another. We must be united and stand unitedly for national projects.

The Making of Paper

BY S. L. SLOAN

President Sloan Paper Company, Atlanta.

As an illustration of the interest which Young America takes in industrial subjects,
the Kalamazoo Vegetable Parchment company, gives the following short "History of Paper," written by John Van Bruggen, a student in one of the schools of Kalamazoo, Mich.
The first paper made was obtained from the pith of a rush or reed which grew along the shores of the Nile in Egypt. It was spread out like sheets and pressed flat, and cemented together with its own sap. But after this was used a time it became scarce and expensive. Later it was obtained from goat and sheep skins. The first paper mill was built in Italy about 1150. The paper was made of raw materials, cleaned by boiling in lye, grinding or chopping into pulp and laying it on a surface to drain the water off and then formed into a sheet. The paper of the modern mills today is made mostly of wood pulp or rag scraps and after being boiled it is rolled and then bleached.
"This," says the above company,
"is one of the frequent laudable efforts of Kalamazoo students on industrial affairs. Young America is preparing to carry on." Every boy and girl should fully sense the importance of the paper industry to the various walks of life.

The thought is a good one. Education is being "industrialized" more and more each year. Certainly no product could come much closer to the student than paper. He is in constant touch with it. The details of the manufacture of paper should be familiar to every student in the land.

Just at this time when congress is struggling with a new tariff bill it may be of interest to recall that duties on paper have been maintained—sometimes up and sometimes down—for over a hundred and thirty years. In 1559 the duty was seven and one-half per cent, ad valorem; in 1816 it had soared to thirty per cent; between 1825 and 1845 it was reduced; in 1848 it went to thirty per cent; in 1857 it went down to twenty-four per cent; fluctuations have been the order of the day, according to the lobby at the national capital.
The newspapers have had their periodical struggles with the paper market. The last few years are not the only ones that have brought heartaches to newspaper publishers.
As early as 1834 publishers of newspapers were dismayed at a rise in price of two and one-half cents a pound in news. As the recent past many of them felt compelled to either increase the price or reduce the size. The New York Tribune and The New York Sun reduced their price. The Philadelphia Evening Register ceased publication as the best way out.

In comparison with the recent statement of one of America's large-est newspaper publishers, who owns a chain of daily papers, that his paper bill last year was over twenty-six million dollars, is the protest against the high cost of paper of the New York Times in 1884, in which it was stated that publication was forced to spend sixty thousand dollars a year for paper.
The New York Journal Commerce set up a similar complaint because it was paying nearly fifty thousand dollars a year for paper.

Position of the South.
As stated in a previous article paper-making in the southern states never did assume large proportions.
The Civil war almost wiped out the industry, such as it was, in the time. In 1861 there were fifteen mills in the states that seceded.
They produced about half the total consumption of these states. One of the Whitman mills in Tennessee did heroic work during the war, never stopping night or day—on Sundays—except to clean the boilers.
Its product was shipped to every available point outside the state and most of the Confederate bank notes and other government securities were printed on the paper made in this mill.

The burning of the mill in August-1863, the largest mill in the south, brought about the suspension of many newspapers and was the most serious blow sustained by the newspapers in this section during the entire struggle. One of the mills of that day, located at Marietta and was run by a relative of the Whitmans of Tennessee.
In last week's article the hope was expressed that the south might in time become a large paper-making section—if some energy should be developed or discovered from which paper could be made in large quantities. During the past week the newspapers have carried reports that experts have probably perfected a process by which paper can be successfully made from pine-trees. Just what this means is not yet fully known. However, if any kind of pine can be used, we may some day see our dream come true.

TIME IS RIPE TO

Standstill of Things in General Is Proof That a Solid Bottom Has Been Reached.

BY HUGH FARRELL,

Financial Editor New York Commercial.

Industry is lying flat on its back and is in need of plenty of fresh air, moderate exercise and fewer doctors. Its ailments have been over diagnosed, and it is sick of imaginary ills, which it seems incapable of shaking off. Rid of a few of the obsessions which have been forced upon it by quick doctors and old women, it would be on its feet in no time.

Fortunately, there are indications that a mental cure is about to be effected. "Back to commonsense" is being substituted for "back to normal" as a national slogan, and signs are multiplying that our national optimism is about to assert itself. Injections of optimism through the needle of generalization are being applied freely. But that sort of sentimentality is wholly deleterious and harmful.

The optimism expressed here is based on a survey of the concrete factors pointing to an early revival of industry and trade. These factors have doubtless met the eye a hundred times in the thousands of hopeful "messages" that have spread over our broad land in the last few weeks, but they have been denied the faith that is due them.
It may be that their very familiarity is responsible for their failure to "register."

There is only one way of weighing facts—get your mind on them.
Now, what has been happening in industry, finance and business in the last year? Why, deflation.
When may a thing be considered as going deflated? Why, when it becomes flat. Business, finance and industry are flat—aren't they?
Everything is flat—business is flat on its back, is business flat on its back? It is flat—business is flat on its back. Is it going to get up?
That's the question. Now, why have we, lacking confidence in our abilities to foresee what will happen even when our judgment tells us that only one thing can happen, wait until the thing that we knew was bound to happen actually happens before we act. The forehanded man, the man who "gets the best" anticipates; he knows that only one thing can happen, and acts now. That man has courage, and deserves everything he gets.

Use Common Sense.

But we have been told that we are going back to normal, and normal is a long way below the present level, and only a fool would buy goods or make contracts as long as there is danger of prices going lower. What if you have?
You don't have to believe it do you?
You needn't believe me either,
when I tell you that we are not going back to normal. Use commonsense. What do we mean by normal, anyway? Was 1914 normal, or 1917, or 1920? If you can go back, you will remember that so far as 1917 and 1914 are concerned they were far from normal. As a matter of fact, when we talk about getting back to normal we mean getting back to commonsense. So far as price levels are concerned, we might just as well think of going back to the price levels of 1890
B. C. as to those of 1912. Why, our cost of government alone this year, next year, and perhaps, for many years will exceed our entire national net income of 1911.

So far as prices are concerned, it is patently absurd to talk about going back to 1914. Prices are already coming to rest. They have all but struck a balance. Few industries have not followed the decline all the way, but the principal industry among those that have not followed the decline, did not follow the advance, not all of it. In the advance, steel prices were stabilized at a level several measures below the present level, but the steel prices of today are merely nominal. Steel can be bought at prices as low, or lower than any that are likely to prevail for any length of time.
Cotton of fact, when we talk about the cost of production. Liquidation in cotton has gone much further than is generally appreciated. A good part of the floating surplus was acquired at the present low price level, and a large part of the remainder is being withheld from the market until prices get back to the level of values upon which bank loans made in 1913 and 1919 were based. A great many long-headed men are long of cotton.

Situation in Hand.

As for wheat, the chances are that it will sell at $2 before it sells at $1. If it ever sells at that price again. Sugar prices are abnormally normal. The situation in the cattle industry is about to be "stabilized," and even the automobile industry, or parts of it, is running ahead of schedule.

All of this is going on in a country in which 3,000,000 to 5,000,- 000 men are out of work; in which the gross income of the farmers has been reduced by billions of dollars;
in which stockholders of corporations are daily being denied dividends, and in which "purchasing power" has been reduced in a thousand and one other ways. What does that go to show? Why, that the country is not producing enough goods, that the price level cannot be made to recede by methods that call for a shutting down of industry. Why should anybody worry about the future of prices or refuse to buy in quantities in the face of such a showing as we are making?

I don't think that we ought to try to "hog" the trade of the world.
We can hog it if we want to.
Europe is in desperate straits, and I doubt if any European nation—even Germany—will ever regain the position it held before the war.
England is trying to strengthen her base of industrial operation by drawing her colonies closer under her wings, but it is doubtful if an imperial alliance is practicable.

Sentiment is a lovely thing, but it batters no paravents, and the British colonies are not likely to long stand aside in favor of the folks at home. The world can be adjusted on "live and let live" principles, but it is not for Europe to dictate the terms.

"Who'll Bid for This Beauty?"

Must the Marriage Market, Now Revived in Europe, Become an American Institution?

THE ancient Babylonian custom permitting prospective husbands to bid for their brides at public auction has been revived in France. In the Place de Lisie, or market place of Fontenay, a thriving little town in the Department of Vendee, the first public auction of young women of marriageable age took place a few days ago. Other, and similar bride market days, it was announced by the public auctioneer, are to be held at stated intervals. And now, in cheerful anticipation of finding husbands by this novel procedure, girls are flocking to Fontenay where, for a small fee, their names are placed on the waiting list.

By adapting modern necessities to ancient practices it is claimed that the people of Fontenay have hit upon a most satisfactory method of solving one of the great post-war problems—that of finding husbands for a preponderance of young women. Fontenay's successful operation of the marriage market is attracting attention all over France and the interest is spreading to England and even to sections of the United States where the finding of suitable mates is not quite so simple a matter as one may suppose.

The little French town of Fontenay opened its marriage market purely as a local institution intended to solve a purely local problem. A party of American tourists happened to visit Fontenay on bride market day and has served to give the town and its auctioned brides world-wide advertising.

In the centre of the public square they saw a group of comely girls, each carrying a sunshade, grouped about a platform on which was standing another girl similarly garbed, who, in response to a few words from a uniformed guard on the ground, would assume a different posture from time to time. A little way apart and viewing the girls with varying degrees of interest and appreciation, was a large gathering of men; men of all sizes, ages and conditions of life; men in blousy smocks, men in uniforms, men in smart metropolitan clothes, dust-covered men leaning on motorcycles, toil-stained men from the fields.

Farther away and apparently no part of this central grouping of men and women, were occasional laughing couples who seemed bent on keeping to themselves by hiding behind sunshades. Evidently the girl on the platform was meant to be the centre of interest, but for all of that a youth would sometimes step out of the crowd, seize one of the other girls in his arms and kiss her soundly. If she objected, the guard would look around and frown, but other than that no effort was made to interfere.

Presently a rather shy, lank youth made his way toward the platform, spoke a few words to the guard, who, in turn, parlayed with the girl, and then reached over and caught the girl's hand. She responded by kissing him on both cheeks. He threw his arm about her and assisted her down the steps. She kissed him again, this time full on the lips, and they wandered off by themselves.

The Americans inquired and found to their amazement that the unmarried girls of Fontenay were being displayed in public for the benefit of any bachelors who might have an inclination to matrimony. In other words, the Frenchman, with his usual sharp appreciation of the realities of life, had dispensed with the coquettish and mishaps of haphazard courtship by reviving the ancient marriage mart.

The father of marriageable girls permits them to go to the market place, where the guard announces publicly that Mlle. Dide de Rabouin, for example, carries a dowry of 20,000 francs and will inherit upon the death of her Uncle Guillaume a fifteen-hectare farm with five oxen and a horse, and is willing to wed. "How much am I bid for this beauty who now stands before you?" the guard then asks. This does not mean that the girl who submits herself for inspection tion is necessarily bound to accept the man who makes the highest bid for her. She retains the right of rejection and signals it by striking her suitor with her sunshade, but she announces to the world that she is looking for a mate when she steps on the block.

Several marriage markets such as the American party discovered at Fontenay have been instituted in the Departments of Vendee, Deux Sevres and Vienne. Social and economic thinkers, mindful of the unusual numerical preponderance of women over men in France, frankly urge the establishment of the marriage market as a civic institution throughout France. Bids put in for the more attractive brides would be used to provide additional dowries for the homely brides. In this way, they assert, many more marriages could be brought about than if they were left to chance as in the past.

England, where much the same disparity between male and female populations exist, may take similar steps, and effects of the movement are being seen even in America. A young Atlanta, Ga., girl recently wrote to the most prominent club in Sacramento, Cal., saying that she was ready to marry one of the 261,340 surplus men of that state. From this an organized effort to bring marriageable girls in touch with communities where a male surplus exists is expected to spring. Or, as a Iowa editor stated in an editorial comment on the subject, "a clearing house for husbands may reasonably be established."

Mrs. Johnny Pearl Pruitt-Hester-Mains-Davidson, Who Acquired Three Husbands Before Her Seventeenth Birthday.

The Forgotten Weddings of "Sweet Sixteen"

"Love Is the Most Wonderful Thing in the World!" Declares Mrs. Pearl Davidson, Whose Recent Matrimonial Escapades Have Led Her Through the Divorce Mill and Back Home to Mother.

Roger B. Mains of Miami, Fla., Thought He Was Husband No. 1 Until No. 3 Appeared with a Previous No. 1 Making Poor Paul No. 2.

three young men were lodged in jail by a plea of Davidson—and then the little bride tearfully delivered a bomb into the camp of the enemy as well as the friend.

For she declared that, after all, Mains wasn't Husband No. 1, but Husband No. 2, while Davidson automatically became Husband No. 3, for, she coolly said, at the green age of fourteen and three-quarters, she had eloped with L. T. Hester, aged twenty-two. They lived together for three months, when it was found that their marriage was not a success, so they separated. Papa Pruitt forgave the young daughter and "bought her a divorce," as she explained it to the dumfounded young men.

Judge John D. Humphries, of the Fulton County Superior Court, before whom the case came, admitted that his head was spinning with all the complications, and referred it, for a preliminary hearing, to Judge George Bell.

And in the midst of all the excitement, two over-zealous detectives arrested the girl and lodged her in jail, where Mains presented a writ of habeas corpus, demanding the custody of his wife—which demand was vigorously protested by Davidson. And then Judge Humphries put both young men in their places, by turning the young lady over to her parents, forbidding her to see either of them, or to leave the county, until the case was finally settled.

And She's Still Having a Good Time

Roger Mains is out on bond and, with his two lieutenants, has returned to Florida to look after his business interests until the case comes up again; George B. Davidson is pursuing his interrupted studies at Emory, with as much enthusiasm and interest as the embarrassing interest of his classmates, and his own disturbed peace of mind, will permit; while Johnny Pearl, the babyish, helpless cause of it all, is living at home and pursuing the even tenor of her way by going with other boys to dances and parties and things, quite as though none of those hyphenated belonged in her name.

JOHNNY PEARL PRUITT, a Georgia girl, annexed three husbands before she was seventeen. She got her first one before she was fifteen. And she isn't pretty, even though, as one husband says, she is "just the right size," whatever that means. But she has got the "come hither" look in her eye that a Methodist bishop once told his flock was the reason he had won three wives, also.

Just what a "come hither" look is hard to say and harder to describe. But, perhaps, by scrutinizing Johnny's maxims of love the matrimonially ambitious girls may visualize and, perhaps, simulate, the magnetic look. Here are the maxims:

I. Don't be too independent—men like a girl to be somewhat of a clinging vine—but don't cling too hard.

II. It's much better to have a pretty curl on the nape of your neck than a college diploma.

III. Be natural and unaffected and have some way of amusing a man when he comes to call other than sitting and gazing into his eyes.

IV. Remember that a steady diet of candy boxes, and love, which is the most wonderful thing in the world, will get tiresome—to a man—if he is forced to keep up a continual fire of caresses, compliments and kisses.

V. Show him you have plenty of pep! If you are tired conceal it, and let him tell you how worn out he is.

By Peggy Gaddis

SUPPOSE you were very much in love and had come all the way from Miami, Fla., to Atlanta, to marry the girl? Suppose that she had eloped with you to the local Gretna Green, married you and then pleaded prettily to be allowed to go home alone, and tell her parents all about it. And suppose that, the next morning, when you called to take your bride home to Florida with you, you found her just finishing a marriage ceremony with another man. Wouldn't you feel a bit "put out"?

That was the experience of Roger B. Mains, 26, good-looking and prosperous, of Miami, Fla., when he went to Atlanta recently to marry the girl of his choice. The girl in the case is Miss Pearl's First Husband, L. T. Hester, with Whom She Eloped at the Very Romantic Age of 14.

Johnny Pearl Pruitt of 89 McDaniel street, Atlanta, Ga., and the second "husband" in the love-tangle is young George B. Davidson, a student at Emory College, near Atlanta. Miss Pruitt was still sixteen when she took part in the adventures in matrimony.

This is the way Mr. Mains tells about it: "I first met Miss Pruitt when she came to Miami for her health last January. It was the afternoon of Jan. 23d, and I was standing in front of a drug store, when she came along with the girl she was visiting. She smiled at me, and I made the remark, loud enough for her to hear, that I would like to meet her. That night I did, at a dance. We danced a lot together, and saw quite a good deal of each other during the next two weeks. She went with no other young man in Miami, and long before she was ready to return to Atlanta I knew that I loved her.

"She was to leave at 2:40 in the morning, and I was to take her to a dance that night. I called for her in my car, and she suggested that, as it was our last evening together, we go for a ride instead of to the dance. So we drove out into the beautiful country surrounding Miami. She said that she loved me and wanted to marry me—that she hated the thought of going back to

"Finally, she agreed to marry me at once—the next day. Naturally, I was pleased—but I gave her plenty of time to return to Atlanta if she wanted to—and I drove her to the station for the 2:40, the 3:20 and the 4 o'clock trains that morning. But each time she declined to leave and said that she wanted to stay and marry me.

"After the 4 o'clock train left I took her to a hotel, where she registered in her own name and went to her room. I did not see her again until the next day, and when we tried to get a marriage license we found that a girl in Florida to be married had to be either 21, or else have the consent of her parents. By this time the people she had been staying with had wired her parents that she had gone, and the parents wired the police at Miami, ordering us held.

"At the police station she cried and said that she wanted to marry me and that she didn't want to go home. Finally, the chief of police and I persuaded her to go back home, and I was to go up a little later, win her parents' consent, and be married then. It was on that understanding that she left—and that I followed."

When Mr. Mains arrived at Atlanta his fiancée apparently was delighted to see him and agreed happily to his suggestion that they be married first and then tell her parents. A license was obtained in Decatur, a suburb of Atlanta, the local Gretna Green, and they were married and returned to Atlanta.

The bride then suggested that it would be best for her to go home alone to explain to her parents. She promised to be ready to return to Miami the next afternoon with her infatuated young husband of a few hours.

Finds Her Being Married Again

Yet the next day, when her husband arrived, he found the ceremony of her wedding to another man being solemnized. She had told her parents, and they, beside themselves with anger, had immediately ordered their attorney to annul the marriage. Knowing little of law, they decided that this was sufficient, and, sending for Davidson, they promptly persuaded the girl that she was now free and should marry the man who had always loved her. The girl states that she did this willingly and freely, because she loved Davidson and did not love Mains.

But when Husband No. 1 found Husband No. 2 on hand, legal action started immediately. It was almost like a political campaign, with each of the candidates for the hand of the much-married young girl agitatedly digging up all the scandal possible from his rival's past, in order to discredit him in the eyes of the public as well as those more intimately concerned.

Davidson discovered that Mains had been married before, and with glee accused him of bigamy. Mains effectually disproved this by showing a certified copy of his decree of divorce.

While all this was going on, re-enforcements arrived for Mains in the shape of two ambitious and devoted young men from Miami, who came to help him fight. On some legal technicality the

Is This the World's Strangest Library?

ONE of the many wonders of China is the Ssu Ku Chuan Shu, "The Collection of Four Libraries", an immense collection of standard Chinese literature and perhaps the strangest collection of books in the world. The whole field of subjects of Chinese literature is covered in this collection of books, which, gathered with infinite care and carefully copied through many years of patient toil, now forms the repository of Chinese culture and civilization and a glowing record of the Chinese Empire, stretching back into the dimness of antiquity.

Some idea of the magnitude of the collection may be gained from figures recently published by the Chinese government in a special report on the matter. The main collection, which is housed at Peking, contains, according to a writer in The London Graphic, 5482 volumes of classics, totalling 727,200 pages; 9476 volumes of history, containing 1,394,574 pages; 9055 volumes of philosophy, containing 1,128,300 pages, and 12,262 volumes of miscellaneous subjects, containing 1,331,730 pages, or a total of 36,275 volumes of 4,541,804 pages.

The collection, divided into four libraries, contains the Book of Changes, the Book of Odes, the Book of Rites, the Annals of Spring and Autumn, the Canon of Filial Duty, the Book of the Composition and Origin of Character, official, standard, biographical, climatological and political histories, books on Confucianism, strategy, law, medicine, astronomy, all the sciences, novels, essays, poetry, songs, criticisms and many other subjects.

The original works were collected between 1773 and 1785 under the auspices of Emperor Chien Lung, a very wise and far-seeing ruler, during whose reign Chinese culture and learning reached a very high level. He determined that posterity should remember him, so he conceived the idea of compiling his huge collection, and in his magnanimous task he was assisted by the whole body of scholars in the country. Many thousands of books had to be recovered from temples and palaces all over the country and read carefully, so that the selection should be the best; then began the arduous task of making four copies, the number afterwards being increased to seven.

Fifteen hundred writers assembled at Peking and for nine years, and with all the sublime patience which is the characteristic and heritage of the Chinese, they toiled, copying out nearly 5,000,000 pages by hand seven times.

The chief editor was Chi Yun, a man with a remarkable memory, and one of the most distinguished scholars that China ever produced. He was a voracious reader, and in order to select the books which were to become standard works for the collection, he read several hundred thousand books in 10 years. His selection was subjected to the keenest criticism of his most brilliant contemporaries, but they were unable to dispute a single volume he had chosen. He also wrote a synopsis of each book, and these now form a valuable key to Chinese literature.

Only three sets of this highly treasured collection are extant in China, and many have been the desires expressed by scholars and collectors to possess a set of this remarkable literary curiosity, but political and other troubles have diverted the attention of the government from the matter. Now, on the urgent request of M. Poincaré, who made the suggestion on behalf of Paris University, the Chinese government has decided to print 200 copies of the collection.

The magnitude of the task they have undertaken, however, is enormous—as a consideration of the proportions of the huge collection throws one into a meaningless maze of figures. In fact, so large is the collection that the Commercial Press of Shanghai, the largest publishing house in China, to whom the printing order was originally offered, have turned it down on the grounds that it is far too big a task for them to undertake.

Of the 200 sets to be printed, 60 are to be sold in America, 60 in Europe and the rest for China, and the price will be about $20,000.

What Fishes Can Teach Us About the Perfect Figure

The Very Interesting and Novel Theory of a Philadelphia Scientist Who Declares That Physical Development and Beauty of Form Can Be Acquired Best in the Water.

The Fish Dive, Which Is Declared to Be the Only Exercise That Systematically Develops Every Part of the Body.

If you would have a perfect figure, if you would be healthy with pink cheeks and full curves, jump into a bathing suit and imitate the fishes. "Back to the Wilds" was the slogan a few years ago of the health-seekers. "Back to the Fishes" is the rallying cry of Dr. Nathaniel W. Boyd, the celebrated Philadelphia osteopath.

Dr. Boyd advocates the absolute imitation of the movements of the fish in water for men and women swimmers. He declares that through the piscatorial regimen perfect health and beauty can be obtained. As consulting physician of the Young Women's Christian Association of Philadelphia, he has had rare opportunities to observe the effect of water sports on the hundreds of girls who have come under his observation. He is a member of the staff of the Osteopathic Hospital of Philadelphia, a recognized authority on physical culture, and has lectured on the benefits of swimming before medical societies in Chicago, Boston, Pittsburgh, New York and other cities.

By Dr. Nathaniel W. Boyd

LET us be fishes! Out of the sea came life. In the waters of long ago we developed our backbone. Man stands today highest of all the vertebrates, wonderfully endowed by the Creator, perfectly equipped to carry on the never-ending plan of progress. But, once upon a time we were fishes and as we darted in the depths or floated lazily on long-forgotten tides nature was fashioning a spinal column.

Let us be fishes! Let us do more swimming. It is the only form of exercise known that brings into play and develops every part of the human system. Not one person in five hundred ever gave a thought to this point, but consider upon it a moment.

When she stands upon the diving board, lithe, graceful and with the bloom of health upon her pink cheeks, the average swimming girl is a magnificent specimen of the land creature. In her walks, in riding, in golf, in skating or in any other form of land exercise she has brought into play only certain parts of the body.

A slight spring, the flash of a curve, a faint splash and she is a creature of the water. As with long, easy strokes she cuts through the waves every muscle, every tendon, every bone structure, every blood vessel, every nerve is brought into play. From an erect pose she has taken a horizontal. This is far more important than most of us realize. Lungs, heart, brain, every internal organ is being exercised in a rational way. The great muscles of the legs and arms, the tiny tissues at the extreme finger-tips are under control. Even the eyes and nostrils receive the impress of this shift to another element. Aside from the cleansing of the pores, there are other beneficial effects upon the skin.

Good for the Backbone

But it is upon the vertebrae that the greatest good comes from the natural exercise of swimming. From the observation of many swimmers at the Philadelphia Y. W. C. A. pool I am led to believe that swimming automatically corrects many defects of the spine. No girl or boy can swim regularly for any length of time without nature taking a hand and delicately adjusting the spinal column. During the mechanism of swimming the spine is engaged in forming straight lines, curves and slight angles, just as our ancestors, the fish, found it. Kinks in the back and nerve impingements are relieved and spinal lesions are often reduced. Better motion is enjoyed, the vertebrae move freely and congestion in the brain and spinal cord is dissipated.

This means building for the perfect form. We do not need to point to Annette Kellerman. In every city of the land where there are pools we can find the approximately 100 per cent. young women whose forms might make a Greek goddess envy.

Each stroke of the arms, each kick of the legs meets with a cushion resistance. There is no form of exercise known that can approximate in this respect. The swing of the golf club meets with opposition from the ball; the stroke of the tennis racquet means impact against the lighter ball, but still an impact; the pole vault, the jump, even the heel striking against the sod can mean only more or less of a jar. But the swimmer at every stroke has a yielding cushion with sufficient resistance to bring about true development. This water cushion is helpful to the spine. The windows between the vertebrae are increased in size and in this way the blood and nerve supply to the whole system is made normal. Nutrition, sensation and the repair of the body are raised to par.

As the spine manoeuvres, the ribs twist and rotate and insure better circulation to the chest organs. At each respiration the ribs spread apart and the chest widens; there is an influx of blood. So the lung circulation is increased and the quantity of air inhaled and carbon dioxide exhaled must be vastly increased.

I may astonish some persons, but I have observed that functional heart disease is cured by judiciously prescribed swimming. This is brought about by the fact that swimming affords a mechanical aid for the propulsion of blood and as a sequence the work that the heart is called upon to do is lessened. We are just beginning to understand what a large part is played by the lymphatic system and how important in this connection is the spleen. At each respiration, particularly while the body is in a horizontal position as assumed by a fish, the diaphragm flattens and makes pressure on the contents of the abdomen, the walls of which will rise. At each expiration the diaphragm rises and the walls of the abdomen sink. Thus there is a constant pump-like oscillation.

It Was the Gracefulness Displayed by the Leaping Bass That Gave Dr. Boyd the Idea That We Have Much to Learn from a Fish About the Poetry of Motion.

That this accelerates the flow of the lymphatic system is true. The mechanical aid propels the lymph toward its terminals and with the lymphatic system functioning properly man is better able to keep in health. In a word, swimming helps to bring about the maximum efficiency of the body and the individual is in a measure rendered immune to disease.

Doesn't it seem queer that for years prudish persons regarded swimming as immodest for girls. And girls need this form of exercise fully as much, perhaps more, than youths of the male sex. The finest examples of healthy, clear-eyed, clean-thinking girls you and I can meet are to be found at the swimming pools or beach. Many a puny, anaemic, hollow-chested, putty-faced girl has been brought into healthy womanhood by swimming, and I believe that it would be better for motherhood and for the future generations if every American girl took to swimming as a regular and systematic form of exercise.

Don't get the idea that swimming is the ideal exercise for the young only. It is the natural exercise for the middle-aged, and in moderation, for the aged. It will help all of us keep young and healthy and cheerful. Let us get back to nature.

Let us be fishes.

From Baseball to $100,000 a-Year

By Frank G. Menke

THE story of Ray Cannon of Milwaukee is a romance of the legal profession; a tale of a self-made man; the recital of a marvelous fight which a youngster made against terrific odds—and the brilliant victory which followed.

Ray Cannon's career is that of a youngster, orphaned in babyhood, who lived in an asylum until he was 14, passed a bar examination before he was 21, and who, at the age of 27, is regarded as one of the most remarkable trial lawyers in America—and has a practice which nets him approximately $100,000 a year.

"How did it happen?" Cannon was asked. "It was all because one of the most wonderful women in the world gave me the chance, and after opportunity came I worked hard and never lost faith in myself even when things looked blackest," was the answer.

The other day in Milwaukee members of the Bar Association tendered a banquet to the remarkable youthful lawyer to commemorate the establishment of what is believed to be a world's legal record. And that was in the winning of 100 consecutive jury cases. Venerable jurists and veteran lawyers who were there to honor him declared that within their memory no attorney in America ever had been able to score 100 successive legal victories in jury trial.

"It is a remarkable achievement for a most remarkable lawyer," declared Chief Judge Cummings of the Milwaukee civil court.

The most fanciful fictionist could dream a story no more romantic than that which involves the life of Ray Cannon.

He was born in Ironwood, Mich. Before he was a year old, fever swept through the little mining town and carried away the mother and father of Cannon. The boy immediately afterward was placed in the Green Bay (Wis.) Orphan Asylum and remained there until he was 14 years of age.

"Then it was that my aunt, Margaret Kennelly, of Minocqua, Wis., took me out and became a real mother to me," related Cannon. "She was a school teacher and her income was small. But whatever it was she always wanted to bestow the major portion of it upon me. No sacrifice seemed too great to insure comfort and happiness for me. There was only one thing that she ever asked of me and that was more of a prayer than a request. It was this:

"Ray, I would be the happiest woman in the world if you were to become a lawyer. I have always dreamed of having a son who became a famous lawyer and I have never had a boy of my own. But you are my son now and you can give me the joy that few women know if you will study law and try to make a name for yourself in the legal profession."

"Up to that time I had had no real determination as to what my future would be. My aunt really made up my mind. I resolved, just to please her, to become a lawyer some day—and at the earliest moment possible.

"That summer I served as a guide for fishermen in the Wisconsin woods and in the fall in the same capacity for hunters. I earned a little money through that source. The following spring I showed enough baseball ability to get a job as a pitcher with the Wausau, Wis., club, which was then in the Wisconsin and Illinois league. That meant a little more money for me and when fall came I passed the necessary examination and became a student at the Marquette University, of Milwaukee.

"But I had always loved baseball and if it hadn't been for my aunt I probably would have stayed on the diamond. During the first three years that I was a lawyer I spent the summers vacationing on a ball team by serving as a pitcher with the Madison (Wis.) club. It gave me a lot of relaxation and a lot of happiness."

Cannon has figured rather prominently in legal affairs with men conspicuous in the sporting world. He handled cases for Freddie Welsh, former lightweight champion of the world, Jim Wilde, the English flyweight champion, and for Ad Wolgast, also a one time title-holder in the lightweight division. It was Cannon who served for a period of two years as the attorney for Jack Dempsey, heavyweight champion, in the suit brought against Dempsey by John Reiser, the New York barber.

"Success has come to me in the last few years, and as is only natural, I am happy about it," declared Cannon. "But whatever I am and whatever success I have achieved, even though some persons attempt to give me the major credit for it, is due to my aunt—the grandest mother that any man ever had."

The Strange Tragedy of a Love

Viola Fay Morris.

It looked like the usual case of murder and suicide when the police broke in and found the dead bodies of Mrs. Fay Viola Morris and George H. Weitricks on the floor of the woman's elegantly appointed apartment in a residential section of Los Angeles. Mrs. Morris was a married woman, estranged from her husband, and the case, prima facie, seemed to be the old, old story.

But when a trunk, days after the tragedy, was opened by a curious friend of the woman, a letter, yellow with age, broken at the creases because of frequent reading, surrendered to the world at large the secret of twenty years which only the death of its cherishing owner revealed.

It disclosed the strangest love lust in the annals of the police department of Los Angeles, Cal. Photographically reproduced here on this page, it tells the fateful story of a doom pronounced at birth—even before birth, for it was of pre-natal origin. The slain girl's mother, an orphan child, was a victim of that terrible yearning called the love lust. She believed, when she married Viola's father, that he combined the wealth of affection her orphanage had deprived her of and of the affection of a husband. But, just before Viola's birth, in the very time when one's mate should be most kind and loving, he deserted her. Viola's birth was her mother's death. The woman died with her love yearning unsatisfied.

By THOMAS B. SHERMAN.

THEY found her lying across the body of the man who had loved and finally slain her. The sensitive features had congealed in an expression of plaintive surprise and the whole effect of outspread hands and twisted torso seemed a final reproach upon a world that had curiously denied her. It was evident that she had been engaged in some trivial household task; an overturned chair, the contents of a sewing basket strewn in all directions, a window curtain torn from its brackets made it easy for the police to reconstruct the scene that had taken place when the man, George H. Weitricks, had rushed in with blazing eyes and a pistol in his hand.

But the mother's longing seemed to enter the body of Viola. From earliest girlhood she evinced an inordinate desire to be the object of sincere and limitless affection. As she grew older the propensity became more apparent. She flattered here and there along the roadside of life seeking to find among men the soul-mate which her mother's spirit in her seemed to urge her to find.

She, too, like her mother, was doomed to disappointment. Lover after lover failed her. Even when, in the belief she had at last found her soul mate, she married, to her ineffable sorrow her husband turned out to be the wrong man. She left him. Still yearning for love she met Weitricks.

But wormwood was her portion at life's feast. The hand of love became the hand of the assassin. The pistol barked its inexorable summons and her life was snuffed out. Folk who believe in such things say that the cat in the murder room snarled not at the sound of the murder revolver nor at the intruders, but at the uncanny apparition it may have seen when the soul of the mother entered that chamber to greet the soul of her daughter—twin souls of disappointment winging their way through the outer darkness on the quest for love that, perhaps, only another world could give them.

They pictured her therefore, clutching at the nearest support when the bullets struck her and then whirling slowly around the room to drop in the same spot where Weitricks, who had now turned the gun on himself, had fallen. A tawny cat on a chair, its back still arched, the only living witness, snarled and spit at those who first entered the room of tragedy.

In such a manner—amid the fastidious appointments of a Los Angeles apartment—was Fay Viola Morris' restless search for love brought to its grim conclusion. She had hardly expected that of life; the lovely eyes seemed to say so as they wearily guttered out. She had hardly known herself what she did expect and in that fact, in that insatiable, unnamed longing, was the real tragedy of Fay Viola Morris. At least the few persons who were close to the girl were of that opinion and the documents found among her effects bore out their belief. It is probable that Weitricks never understood the woman he loved. The nature that could so warmly greet his first advances, so plainly crave the supporting influence of a rich affection in her life, and yet turn so coldly away at last was too inexplicable, too subtle for a man whose approaches to people were direct and whose desires were elemental and unmistakable.

If some one had told him that she had hoped against hope that she could love and prize him above all things, he would have rejected it as mockery. The philosophy of George Weitricks held that one of two things must be true—she loved him or she didn't. And if she did not love him, why did she invite him with such ardor in the beginning, explore his possibilities with such eagerness and then, without a word of explanation, try to force him out of her life?

That Mrs. Morris did encourage him at first is plainly brought out in evidence furnished by friends of hers. In fact, Weitricks was the cold one in the beginning, but inevitably yielded to a charm that was doubly powerful in that it was both obvious and hidden—both physical and spiritual.

EARLY LIFE PRACTICALLY UNKNOWN.

Weitricks, it seems, was a stranger to California. Two years before he left a job in Fillmore, Kans., and with his savings amounting to $1,200 had come to Los Angeles. He met Mrs. Morris shortly after his arrival and saw her continuously for nearly two years. No doubt he had suffered for many months. Mrs. May Aarons, with whom he boarded, spoke of his going around in a daze, wringing his hands and occasionally moaning aloud. She feared that something might happen. And then finally came a night when his agony could be endured no longer. This was the night of May 19 and was the last night on earth for himself and Fay Viola Morris, the woman he loved and killed because he loved her. The deed had evidently been planned for in the pocket of the dead man a note was found which read:

"Please notify Mrs. M. Y. Buckner, Santa Paula, Box 326." That was all.

The early life of Fay Viola Morris is accounted for only by the documents in her trunk. None of her friends knew much about her history save what fragmentary hints she herself had dropped from time to time. But from these papers, it was found that her father had abandoned her mother who had died at her birth. This occurred at Faircourt, Neb. From another document, a court record, it has been assumed that the woman who took the baby and reared her was named Rebecca Favinger. Occasional references to Rebecca Favinger were found in other correspondence of Mrs. Morris; once or twice she spoke of her as her "first love."

The letter establishing such facts as are known of her parentage read as follows:

"Dear Friend:

"The darling little baby was brought over today

Her father was a Scotchman, rather wild and soon tired of the sweet and lovely girl wife. So he ran off and has never been heard of since. No one will ever molest you. She will never know the love of anyone else.

to my house. I feel sure she will please you.

"God will surely bless you for your labor of love. Her own mother was an orphan child herself and died in giving this child birth.

Closely related to this letter, in its bearing on the story of Fay Morris' early life was a legal document imprinted by the seal of the County Court of Adams County, Neb., setting forth that on the 26th day of April, 1911, when the girl was 20 years of age, Rebecca Favinger asked for her adoption. This document concluded by saying:

"Upon consideration thereof the court finds that the whereabouts of the parents (if living) of the said Viola Fay Davidson, are unknown.

"The court further finds that the said Rebecca Favinger has had the care, custody and control of the said Viola Fay Davidson since she was two months of age.

"It is therefore considered, adjudged and ordered by the court that the said Viola Fay Davidson be and she is hereby fully and legally adopted by the said Rebecca Favinger."

Rebecca Favinger's purpose in legally adopting the child she had already raised to womanhood was disclosed by further documents which set forth the rights of Fay Davidson, or Fay Favinger as she then became, to certain great tracts of land in Nebraska which had been owned and developed by Rebecca Favinger and her husband Jim. The Favingers wanted to assure the girl's inheritance.

In these six papers are all that is recorded of the first twenty years of this wistful little seeker after love. She often spoke of the Favingers to her friends in Los Angeles and she occasionally mentioned some slight flirtation, some youth who, for the moment, loomed large on her horizon. But the general impression they gained from what she had to say of those first twenty years, was that they saw only the beginnings of that accumulated longing which was still unsatisfied at her death.

"Hungry" Orphan

How the Hitherto Unexplained Motive for the Slaying of Viola Fay Morris and the Man Who Loved and Killed Her Has Been Revealed Through Letters Showing the Restless Search of an Adopted Beauty for the Affection She Was Denied in Babyhood.

Viola met many men and many men were drawn to her. A Canadian rancher followed her down the coast of California and back to Los Angeles and only left her when she barred her doors and her windows to keep him out and appealed to the police for protection. Another man, a widower, offered her his personal fortune under the arrangement she might care to make. But these men were interested in her even for a few moments and received encouragement in their suits. Whatever her other faults, Viola was in no sense a vampire or a flirt. The first of these men about whom anything is known was one she referred to simply as Roderick. Roderick disappeared after an extremely brief episode. Friends of the dead woman say that for a while she was certain that here, indeed, was the man. It seems that Fay Viola was with a party of friends at a Los Angeles hotel dining room when this man Roderick, with two other men, came in. Though none of her own party knew the man, Fay Viola refused to leave until she had been introduced. She plainly announced that if no other way could be found she would walk over to his table and introduce herself. Needless to say she finally met her Roderick. He proved to be an Eastern business man who intended to leave Los Angeles the next day. He left three weeks later.

'HAD BEEN CHASING AN ILLUSION.

Each day and every night thereafter for those intervening three weeks, Fay Viola and her Roderick were together in various places about town. What his final reactions were are not known and are not important, for as Mrs. Hetherington said of Fay Viola "she didn't live who could resist her once she let her go."

All of the charm of her liberal, vital nature she summed up for the delectation of this man. For those three weeks she could see no one else—wanted no one else. And the man, his head whirling with the intoxication of her presence and her influence, forgot everything.

This affair subsided as suddenly as it began. There came a day when Fay Viola realized that she had thrown herself into the arms of a man—she had taken more or less commonplace individual and warped him into an ideal that had emanated from her own heart. Some day she put him on a train, kissed him goodby and never thought of him again.

The next figure to enter the tragic mis-en-scene was Earl Millen of Pomona, Cal. Millen was the pursuer in this case and unusual powers of persuasion are accredited to him for he evidently convinced the girl that she could be happy together always. There is no record of a church marriage but there was a legally arranged "arrangement." Their relationship is recorded in an agreement between the man and "Viola Fay Millen" witnessed by a notary of Los Angeles county.

"Whereas," reads this document, "the parties hereinafter husband and wife and are living separate and

"Whereas, the parties are desirous of effecting and making a permanent property settlement between themselves,"

It continues with a division of property. The document is signed by both. It was dated as of December 29, 1917. Fay Viola or Viola Fay, as she was now calling herself, never gave any explanation of what had happened between her and Millen. If the disappointment was greater than any she had before it must have been because she expected more.

Two years later—on May 27, 1919, to be exact—she appeared again as Mrs. Jim Morris. The man was Jim Morris of Ontario, and the story is told that he saw her first on a railroad train, followed her to Los Angeles, laid violent siege to her heart and finally convinced her that he, indeed, was the lover she had been seeking.

The Morrisises were very happy at first. Ontario people looked upon them as ideally mated and having much in common. Under the name of Morris and Morris they operated a garage at the corner of A and Lemon streets in the town. Though they were partners in this enterprise the greater part of the money was supplied by her.

For a long time Viola Fay had probably convinced herself that her love quest was ended. After a while, however, the Morrisises began to have disagreements. These often grew into violent quarrels during which blows were struck and articles of furniture used as missiles.

Following their separation she moved into Los Angeles and he took up his residence at the Intercean Inn. It was in Los Angeles that she became acquainted with George H. Weitricks, the young ex-service man who had drifted out to the coast from Kansas.

Strangely enough Weitricks was rather cold to her advances at first. For a long time he made every effort to avoid her and often descended to downright rudeness. An acquaintance of both said his treatment of her was shameful. But one day he succumbed—and almost at the same time Mrs. Morris discovered that she once more had been chasing an illusion. No doubt she would have found it out earlier if he had fallen in love with her at first. His lack of interest stirred her to a curiosity that she might not have otherwise felt. Once she was convinced she could not love him, however, she tried to put him out of her mind and her life.

But Weitricks by now was deeply stirred. He refused to be put out of her life, while she, on the other hand, having ceased to care herself, couldn't seem to appreciate the fact that Weitricks was suffering the tortures of the damned.

This condition, however, might have gone on indefinitely, so long as no other man entered the equation, but when Weitricks heard that Mrs. Morris was thinking of going back to her husband it seemed to force a decision upon him.

Mrs. May Aarons of 1348 Douglas street, Los Angeles, with whom Weitricks boarded, said that she felt something tragic impending.

"I felt it so strongly," she said "that I had folks look in his room to see if he had a revolver hidden there.

They didn't find any. I never knew him to carry a gun.

"He quit his job with a local oil company and the next day he said he was going to leave. 'No you're not George,' I told him, 'You're going to forget this thing and stay right here.'"

"We had dinner a little after 6 that night and then George said he was going out. I asked him where and he said to see Fay. I asked him whether he'd be back. 'I don't know,' he answered.

"All day long he'd been mooning around the house, brooding, twisting his hands, crying. I looked out of the window and said kind of idly 'Wonder what they call that hill?'"

EXPECTED HOME ON DAY OF DEATH.

"'Hopeless mountain, I guess,' he answered, and smiled a little bitterly. And then that night he went out. I can see now that he had determined to kill Fay when he left."

It is probable that Weitricks spoke not a word when he walked into Mrs. Morris' apartment on Montana street. It wasn't necessary. If his face was as black and threatening as when he left Mrs. Aarons she could read his purpose at a glance.

Probably she started back—or, inasmuch as several of the bullets went wild, she may have vainly tried to wring the revolver from his hand after that first bullet had pierced her breast, and her left hand flying there had come away dripping with blood.

One of the bullets went through the door and into the wall of the corridor outside. Another lodged in the woodwork of a door leading into an adjoining room. He then turned the revolver on himself and crumpled to the floor. The police who broke down the door a few minutes later, found her lying near him. She moaned once or twice as she was being carried to the hospital, but never spoke.

Out in Ontario, when Jim Morris heard the news, he jumped into an automobile and was brought to Los Angeles at breath-taking speed. Tears had worn channels down his cheeks. He was still crying.

"Merciful God," he mumbled, as he tried to force his way into the undertaking establishment where his wife's body lay. "Merciful God! I was expecting her back home today." Fay Viola, it seems, had determined to make another try for the perfect love with her husband.

The Mrs. M. Y. Buckner whom Weitricks had desired notified was his sister. His parents, it seemed, had moved from their Kansas home and were now living in Waco, Tex.

Among the effects of the dead woman was a photograph of Weitricks and herself, which marked the climax of her brief passion for this unfortunate youth. The photograph, which is reproduced on this page shows the two in a fervent embrace and was made by Weitricks himself who set up the camera on a box and made the exposure by means of a string. Weitricks had told friends of his that the photograph was Fay's idea.

No doubt she felt that her love for Weitricks couldn't last. Perhaps it was in a despairing moment when she had grown hopeless of ever knowing a love that would endure. And being in this frame of mind she may have wanted a record of that high throbbing rapture before it finally disappeared.

It was her last kiss of love.

THE RED FISHER

By Owen Oliver

THE Red Fisher knows the bait for every one. He took me with Robert Carr. You'll think that's only a figure of speech, but it isn't. There is a full bottle of strong sleeping-draught in my bedroom, marked off into sixteen tiny portions by lines of glass. I would take the whole bottleful if I could escape a picture of the Red Fisher waiting to pull me out of the river of sleep. The Devil may be only a superstition that ages haven't quite wiped off the slate of heredity; but the picture is a fact. You can see it on the walls of Nugent's Gallery: 874, The Red Fisher. Arthur Dane.

It shows up best if you stand just beside the left hand seat of the settee. You get the full malignity of the grin then. I stood just there when my duel with conscience began. I suppose I am not ultra-modern. I have a conscience.

It was on a rainy Friday afternoon three years ago, and I had a dull hour to kill. I passed the gallery. "I may as well be bored by myself as bored by pictures," I reflected. "I can't be more bored by pictures than I am by myself." I thought fifty yards down the road. I turned back and went in.

I saw my own thoughts rather than the pictures, until I found myself staring at the devil; a very proper Mephistopheles, long, lean, sardonic, and habited in hard red. He sat upon an overhanging branch, dangling his pointed shoes above a glassy stream that came from nowhere into a green wood and ran out to nowhere again. A network bag lay upon the grass behind him, with his varied bait peeping through the meshes; a miniature of a pretty, enticing woman, and a cardinal's hat; a diploma, a seal of office, and a fat packet of bonds; a necklace of diamonds and a president's chair. A pale young monk lay dead upon the bank, caught by a saint's aureole; and a red-faced woman captured by a wicked flask. The wine was dribbling out and staining a little white daisy purple. The Red Fisher was angling now with a pretty manikin. A wistful, elfish girl was swimming away from temptation; but she looked back over her round shoulder, and her pouting mouth opened a little as if she wanted to come back and snap. I wondered foolishly whether she was going to be caught; moralized tritely upon the vanities that catch women and men; and then suddenly—

I turned over temptations hopefully in my mind, but could find none strong enough to haul me to the devil's bank. I was a dull bachelor woman, I told myself impatiently, half-past temptation, and growing into an old maid with a hundred weaknesses and no grand vice; not warm enough to nourish a sin.

"Isn't there anything you'd risk the hook for, Nina?" I asked myself. "Surely you aren't quite dried up yet." I looked into my secret mind, as if it were a picture book, and the burly form of Robert Carr grew slowly out of the mist within: dear old Robert, manly, and clever, and courteous, and kind! I felt my eyes widen and my mouth open and close with a snap. I am telling the truth. I did not know before how much I liked him, though I would have said any day and anywhere that he was the nicest fellow in the world. . . . Well, I did like him, in a perfectly proper way; liked him very much. What of it?

"My dear Devil!" I said contemptuously. "You've chosen the wrong fly! I don't nibble at the husband of my friend. . . . And besides he doesn't want me."

I gasped again at the self-betrayal of the last words; reddened and then turned very pale. I could see my face in a little mirror. I have a conscience, as I have said. There were many virtues that I had no great care for, but I cherished an idea of myself as loyal to my friends. Margaret was a cat of a woman, and I was another, but we were pals; had been all our lives. "Not her husband," I said, even in the dark depths of my mind; but the heart is deeper. That said I was lost if the Fisherman won over Robert Carr to help him angle for me. I must fly from temptation or risk the consequences.

"Well," I decided deliberately, "I take the risk, if there is one. There isn't. Robert loves his wife, if she doesn't care much for him. She is ten times better looking than I. He likes pink, smiling young prettiness. He'd never want this pale, old snappiness thing, except perhaps as a friend. . . . Poor boy! He needs some one to comfort him. Fish away, my dear Devil! I'll risk all I have and am to be a little help to dear old Bob."

I went to their house on the Saturday afternoon, as I generally did. Margaret was animated. Robert was gloomy. She was going to drag him away to the seaside on Monday; and his roots are in his business and his study.

"It's all very well for you," he grumbled. "You'll have drives and excursions and dances and whist drives, and two or three admirers hanging around. I shall have nothing to do but potter along the beach. I hate pottering. I'd rather stay and work in town."

"Don't potter," I advised. "Take to golf or something. Get an admirer yourself, if Maggie doesn't behave."

"That introduces a subject for me!" Margaret cried gayly. "Come with us, Neen, and take him off my hands for a fortnight. You can teach him golf, if you like; or sailing. He'd love that! Nag him and wake him up! Wanted an experienced lady, with a stimulating tongue to take entire charge of a dull infant! You just fit!"

"Poor Robert!" I said. "My sailing's all right, and my tongue! But I don't know

golf. Don't be afraid, my dear chap. I won't add to your troubles."

"I'm sure you won't," he declared heartily. "Come and teach me sailing, Nina. I'd like it."

There aren't too many red letter days in my calendar; but there wasn't a black one in that fortnight. Margaret spent the days on the pier, showing off her new hats and dresses, and smiling at competing cavaliers. She always had a train of adorers. Of! She was a pretty woman! She danced all the evenings. Robert and I sailed away the days in a twenty-foot half-decked boat. My father taught me sailing when I was a child, and now I taught Robert. In the evenings we went to concerts and entertainments, or walked—generally walked. Of! those walks. I never knew before that the sky was so full of stars!

It did not occur to Robert to make love to me, and I did not try—I swear it—to put the notion in his mind. I just wanted him to be happier, and I made him. I was a fine pal, he told me, as we scudded back before the wind on the last afternoon. I remember the salt spray on my lips, and my hair blowing loose, and the adoration in my heart when I looked at him.

"I'm glad," I said, "I like to be your pal, Bob."

"Thank you," he acknowledged, "dear old girl! Lord knows, I need one. Margaret—" He set his lips. "Our tastes differ a good deal," he concluded.

I nodded. "It's just that," I consoled him. "Margaret is all right in her way. I am fond of her, you know." That was fairly true. "There's nothing in her little flirtations, Bob." That had a large element of truth. She skated on thin ice, but she did not go in. "She's fond of you, really." That was quite true. "I think, Bob, if you spoke to her frankly, 'if you said 'I'd like us to get on better, Maggie. I much prefer you to any one else, and—'"

That was my supreme effort. God knows what it cost me. I would have gone through with it and tried to reconcile him if he had not interrupted me, but he held up his hand. "I don't, Nina," he said, very quietly. "I haven't for several years. . . . Don't ask me questions."

"No," I promised faintly. "I won't."

I opened my mouth a little to catch the salt wind. It seemed to me that there was not air enough in the whole world, and that my heart was too small to hold my hot blood. I loved him as a mother loves her little child just then; this big, strong man. Our love should be silent and pure, I vowed, and everything else in my life should be set aside to do little things to brighten him.

"We won't talk about troubles," I said cheerfully. "Let's make the best of the comfort we have. . . . A good pal to sail a good boat! I'll put her nose into the waves and make her splash; and we'll get drenched and laugh like kids. Kids who are out with their pal!"

"Their pal!" he echoed. "Let's shake hands on that!"

Of! That was a red letter afternoon. We went back to town that evening.

"Come in often, Nina," he begged when we parted at the station. "Good luck, old girl!"

He smiled at me then. He had such a nice smile; and such a nice voice; so rich and round. I used to seem to hear it when I woke up at nights. I cried for him then.

Things went badly between him and Margaret during the next year. He was too civil to her, and she was not civil enough to him. They had a bad quarrel, cold on his side and hot on hers, and decided to occupy separate rooms. Margaret told me herself. Her pink face was very red, and she gritted her splendid teeth.

"As he does not want me," she said, "the inference is obvious."

"That he thinks you want another man," I answered sharply.

"No one in particular," she rejoined pettishly. "I like dozens. That's my safety! He likes very few women. That's his danger. If you only like one you like too much."

"If," I cried scornfully. "It's like you to try to drop the blame on him. He's worth a dozen of either of us. You're a silly, suspicious woman. Are you working round to object to me being friends with the poor, neglected boy?"

I never had a greater insult than her look of amazement then.

"You!" she cried with her big blue eyes wide open. She had lovely soft eyes and mine are hard, heady things. "You!" She laughed. I'd have liked to take her full throat in my hands and strangle the snorer. "No, I'm not so absurd as that. You just take the place of a sister to him. . . .

You and I have been rather like sisters, Neen. . . . Don't look hurt, dear old thing. I didn't mean that a man couldn't like you very much, only—you are far too good a pal to me to let him flirt with you."

"I am his pal also, Margaret," I said steadily, "and, since you mention the matter to me, I don't blame him nearly so much as I blame you."

"I don't either," she agreed, "but still—I'm a cat, of course, but I only wanted just to have a little amusement. If he'd pulled me up as he ought to have done I'd have been pulled up after a kick or two, and—I suppose you know that I like him!"

"I suppose so," I answered, "but you've had a funny way of showing it."

"Well, you see, it may be only my fancy, but three or four years ago I thought that he cooled to me. If he'd been just angry or nasty and we'd quarreled, I'd have made it up very nicely, but he didn't seem to want to make it up, and I thought—you'll laugh, but I did think that there must be some one else. I thought so the other day when we met—some one. I watched him talking to her. I am sure she likes him, anyhow."

"Who?" I demanded. My voice was more anxious than I liked.

"Joyce Reed," Margaret told me.

"Joyce!" My laugh was very genuine. "You donkey! Why, she's about twenty-four, and he's getting on to forty. He always likes kids, but he's quite fraternal to them. He doesn't even see her more than once in six months."

"Doesn't he? You know more of his doings than I do."

"More shame to you," I said vigorously. "Well, I don't think his doings concern Baby Joyce. Robert's tastes are mature. I don't suppose his doings concern any woman, but he has not broached the subject to me."

"He might if you laid him on a little," she suggested, with one of the pretty sideways looks that trap a man and warn a woman.

I rose to go.

"Margaret," I said sternly. "You disgust me. Robert is my friend. His friendship is a precious thing to me. I don't mind saying that to you, or on the housetops! He is absolutely the best man I know. If you dream that I would win his confidence and betray him to you, you are greatly mistaken. Look here! If I found him out I shouldn't tell you. That's flat!"

"No," she agreed. "I don't believe you would. You're a stiff creature! But you'd influence him. You're a better sort than you know. Influence him a little in this direction, Neen." She held out her grand arms. "He's my husband, and—The red rushed over her handsome face and superb neck; even over her rounded arms—"I want him!"

"Umph!" I said. My voice was indifferent enough; but my heart was knocking to and fro, and screaming that she should not win him back from me.

"I know what you're thinking," she charged me; "but you're wrong. I don't want him to plague. I'd be good to him—now. Try, Neen. If you could put the idea of making it up into his head? It's natural to him to do the kind thing if he thinks of it. You could say it's a pity we squabble, because I can be nice, and—you could say you know I like him. . . . Will you, Neen? We never had sisters, you and I; only each other."

"I'll try," I answered.

That was a lie. I did not try to lead him back to her. I tried to alienate him; warned him against being fooled by her.

Margaret's affectionate mood soon passed. I knew it would! Their dissension became sharper and more in evidence. They never went out together; and whenever one dined at home the other dined with friends, or "in town." It was generally she who was out; but Robert was "at the club" more than he used to be. He was abstracted and silent very often when I talked to him. I had always been able to rally him into interest before.

I spoke to him frankly one evening when Margaret had gone out and I had dropped in. "Bob," I said, "you look upon me as a pretty trusty friend, I think."

"Indeed," he assured me, "I do! I'd trust you blind, Nina."

"There's something on your mind, I know. Would it help you to tell a pal?"

He leaned back in his chair and opened his cigarette case.

"No," I commanded, "a cigar! One of those you keep for special occasions. It will unroll you. I'll get one. Give me the key of the cabinet." I took the key from him and fetched him one of his "extraneous" as he called them.

"There, old pal; the precious red hand. See! Now you can talk."

"Good old Nina! How you know my ways and study me. . . . You see, there are things that one can't talk about; things that concern other people."

I nodded.

"Talk about a man you know," I suggested, "and leave out people's names; and I'll advise you in the abstract."

He shook his head.

"I'm not good at acting, Neen. I'm talking about myself. . . . Eight years ago I married Margaret. Nobody blamed us. We appeared to be just suited. We didn't really suit, Neen; not even on the honeymoon. I remember—bahl! I'm gossiping like an old lady. Well, wherever the fault lay, we drifted away from each other. Possibly she didn't mean much harm by her flirtations; but they were sufficiently in evidence to humiliate her husband. I was too proud to own my hurt. I just gritted it out till I didn't care a hang. Well, not much. . . . Anyhow, I was very lonely for a long time, and then I found . . . a very wonderful woman. . . . O! a very wonderful woman!"

"You thought her so," I said, I sighed.

"She was, and is. There has never been a word of love between me and her, Neen; but we know."

"Both of you?" I asked unsteadily. I caught sight of my face in the beveled mirror of a wall bracket just then; and it wavered. Pale, and with the young bloom gone, and never beautiful; but it looked loving. I thought. Ah! loving!

"Both of us," he said unhesitatingly. "Yes. Sometimes we have been near to the word; but we have paused in time. It is not my strength that keeps us as we are, but the strength that I get from her; my reverence for her goodness and daintiness. She is above all women. She—"

"Hush!" I said. "We are not talking of her, but of you. This is your story, which you are telling to your friend. . . . So truly your friend, Bob, you know."

"I know. . . . I don't want to sink in your estimation, friend. I will tell you how I looked at it. There is no wrong to Margaret, I said. For years she has not wanted me; and she has not scrupled to flirt with others. I do not say that she has been untrue to her marriage vow, as the world estimates it. I do not know."

"I do not know," I said in a faint whisper. If I did a shameful, damnable thing from first to last it was when I said that. Margaret was an honest woman then. I had not the slightest doubt of it.

"There can be no wrong to myself. For love of her whom I love—I am a better man; and our love is innocent and pure. . . . The question was about the girl. I kept out of her way for some years, for fear that her love for me—I knew it—would spoil her life. Then I saw that she meant to die a maid for love of me. Why should not she as well as I have the comfort of friendship, I argued. Well, we have it. I think life is just the hours that we spend together. . . . Is it very wrong, Neen?"

"Only unwise," I said, still very faintly. "Is that all?"

"No." He put his cigar to his lips, but I saw that it had gone out.

"I'll light it," I offered.

It was growing dusk, and when the match flared up I seemed to see the Red Fisher in it, laughing triumphantly in the flare.

"Hook me, then?" my mind told him fiercely. I expected Robert's arm to go round me as I stood beside his chair, offering him the light. I held his wrist with one hand to steady the cigar. . . . The touch that I hungered for did not come.

"Thank you, Neen. You spoil me. . . . The devil of it is that Margaret has taken one of her turns—turned toward me as she might to a new flame. She wants to make it up. . . . Neen, I don't want her. I should not want her if the other woman weren't in the world. Don't tell me it's my duty to make it up! . . . That's what I have on my mind; what I wanted to ask you, my good friend."

There was a long, long silence. I sat with my chin on my hand staring into the fire; made a picture there with the black and gold and amber and the gray smoke. . . . The Red Fisher dangled his feet merrily in the flames; set his teeth and forgot to smile as he played me at the end of the line; wondered—so did I!—if I was firmly hooked. I swam round and round, I thought, till the water ran in fast ripples that I could hear. Hiss-s-s-s. . . . That was only the sound of the flames. . . . Flap—flap—flap. . . . Only the puffs of the jets of coal gas catching fire. . . . I put my hands on the arms of the chair. One more tightening of my nerves and I should go to Robert. I paused only for the right words. . . . Just his name. I would say "Bob, dear!" I drew a breath; half rose. . . . And heard Margaret's voice in the hall. She had come home. . . . What a magnificent woman she looked when she switched on the light at the door!

"I had a fancy to be domestic tonight," she said laughingly; "but I suppose you're going out, Bob?"

"I am going out," he told her, and rose.

They looked hard at each other. Several times I thought they were going to speak, but they did not. She gasped when he had gone; clinched her hands. Presently she clutched my arm.

"He's going to her!" she hissed.

"Don't be a fool," I said.

"He wants to get rid of me," she said in my ear. "He thinks—Neen, he's having me watched!"

"He would, if I were he," I told her—that was not true. I had no suspicion of her—but he isn't. I should think it's your conscience; if you have one."

"Until tonight I had," she told me furiously, "now it's gone. I came home to try and put things right. I was ready to humble myself to him." She laughed wildly. "You side with him, of course. I daresay you'd try to marry him, if I were gone!"

"Margaret!"

"I didn't mean it, Neen. Don't you turn on me. You're the only pal I have. Women don't like me. . . . Well, men do! . . . Can't you help me, Neen? I tell you I'm desperate. Do you understand?"

"What do you mean?" I clutched her arm.

"Why should I stay with a man who despises me when another adores me? I've been a good woman till now, but . . . You don't know what temptation is—"

"Who is it?"

"I didn't say it was any one. . . . Don't start at me like that! You look a-a devil! . . . If I did, he'd have driven me to it; he's a cold brute. He—"

"I won't listen to abuse of him," I said.

"Don't go," she pleaded. I want help—I—"

I called at Robert's office the next morning and saw him alone.

"Bob," I said, "I've got to be disloyal to one friend or another. You have to come first. . . . You are one of all friends—dearest to me. . . . I can't see your life spoiled by a tie that you honor and she—if I were you I should have Margaret watched. . . . Not a word. It doesn't bear discussion."

He rose slowly; staggered; rested his hand on the table.

"Nina?" he said hoarsely. "You know that she—?"

"Have her watched," I said sharply. Then I turned and walked out. I went away for a month. When I came back he had taken proceedings for his divorce.

I don't know what kink in my character took me to the court. He had kept me out of it, of course, and I needn't have gone. Margaret was foolish enough to fight the case. I don't think she expected to save herself, only wanted to say what she said in the box.

"I have done things that lay me open to suspicion," she said, looking like a beautiful, pale statue, "things that I should not have done. I deserved to lose my husband's affection! But I tried to win it back. He did not want me back. That made me desperate, and I—"

"You have not answered my plain question, madam," Robert's counsel interrupted. He repeated the question—I need not name it—and she fainted in the box. The judge suggested to her counsel that it was a matter for his discretion whether "this painful cross-examination" should proceed when his client recovered. She did not reappear, and her counsel accepted judgment against her. I sometimes wonder whether she merely let judgment go by default to give Robert his freedom. The man protested her innocence, but he married her afterwards. I do not trouble very much about Margaret even now. I did not trouble about her at all then.

PARIS POISONER COMES TO GRIEF

Mme. Monin, the poison victim of the insurance plotters.

With Acute Mushroom Poison and Typhoid Bacilli, Clever Insurance Swindlers Bring About the Death of Their Victims and Collect Thousanas.

MURDER is not exactly an art in which conspicuous progression or imagination has been demonstrated in the elapsing of the centuries.

Usually a single method of doing away with one's neighbor has been uppermost in a given epoch—for example, before the advent of firearms poison was all the rage among murderers and murderesses. With variations, it is true, such as snakebites, the means favored by Cleopatra in voluntarily removing herself from this planet. The poison potion of the Medici, without the handing round of which no really swell Florentine banquet was complete in the fifteenth century, has passed into history; so too the fatal cup circulated with a diabolical lack of object by the Marquise de Brinvilliers at the time of the French Revolution: Strangulations and stabings must stand close to poisoning in any historical survey of murder, and the trio probably covered most of the major crimes committed down through the ages. Then came revolvers and snuff like, and poisoning gradually fell off as a popular method of destroying one's fellow.

Very seldom did a really imaginative criminal appear on the scene. Neil Cream, the English doctor who found pleasure in poisoning prostitutes by giving them arsenic in chocolates, was merely hovering round the table of the Medici. Another Englishman, one Smith, did however happen upon something original in his scheme of drowning his wives by force, having previously insured them. Smith used to press the women under water in their baths, taking great care to leave no fingermarks and doing all the pressing with the palm of the hand to the forehead of his victim.

The Paris police now believe they have got hold of a rarity such as Smith, a murderer of imagination. And the motive, too, is alleged to be the same as Smith's—to draw money on insurance policies.

One afternoon in April, 1918, a young woman named Jeanne Drouhin invited her milliner, the forty-year-old Mme. Monin, up to her apartment in the Faubourg St. Denis, Paris, ostensibly to try on a hat. Mlle. Drouhin lived at this address with her lover, a wine agent named Henri Gerard, and after the business of the visit had been accomplished all three sat down—Mme. Monin, Mlle. Drouhin and Gerard—and took a glass of benedictine at the last named's invitation. Directly afterward Gerard pleaded a dinner engagement on behalf of himself and his mistress and, escorting the milliner to the street, left her hastily. Mme. Monin started for the subway. She never got there. After proceeding a block or two she collapsed on the sidewalk and had to be taken away in an ambulance to her home in the Rue Sadi-Brahim. Here she rapidly grew worse and died before her own physician could attend her. The autopsy carried out by the latter revealed that death had resulted from acute mushroom poisoning.

It is now alleged that Mme. Monin's death was worth 80,000 francs (about $8,000 at current exchange) to Gerard and his mistress. It has been found in effect that nineteen days before the partaking of the benedictine Mlle. Drouhin, impersonating Mme. Monin, had made a tour of the four chief French insurance concerns—the Phenix, the Abeille, the Urbaine and the Nationale—and had taken out four separate policies of 20,000 francs apiece, two in favor of Gerard and two in her own favor (as Mlle. Drouhin). Upon the demise of Mme. Monin two of the companies paid up without suspicion, but the Phenix desired further particulars and the Urbaine was never applied to—the first clue the police got that something was amiss.

Meanwhile Gerard had married his mistress on the strength of the 40,000 francs, and with Gallic largeness of heart had established her in the home of a former mistress, Mme. Dousteau, in a villa at Neuilly, the ménage à trois succeeding joyously till the descent of the police.

This supervened following the failure of Mlle. Drouhin, or Mme. Gerard as she now was, to keep an appointment with the Phenix Company, who had asked for further proof that she was the beneficiary under the policy purporting to have been taken out by Mme. Monin. Gerard was taken into custody as well, but at this time the authorities had no idea that they were engaged upon anything more serious than an affair of forgery and swindling. Search of the villa at Neuilly, including the contents of Mme. Dousteau's strong box, revealed far more interesting possibilities. The box was found to contain, along with a number of half-burned letters belonging to Gerard, a collection of life insurance policies made out in the names of Messrs. Pernotté, Godel, Delmas and Duroux, and, more intriguing still, a series of books on mushroom poisoning and typhoid bacilli. The police then began piecing the puzzle together.

First it was found that M. Pernotté, one of the names found on the policies, had died of typhoid fever in 1912 and that Gerard had benefited by the sum of 250,250 francs from various policies made out in his favor. Pernotté was taken suddenly ill of typhoid fever while staying with Gerard at Royan, where several doctors who were called ordered hypodermic injections. These injections were administered by Gerard. Pernotté grew rapidly worse and died.

The case of M. Delmas was similar, though happily, Delmas, who was taken ill after dining with Gerard in the barracks, where they were both mobilized as automobile drivers, was not cared for by his friend but was taken to the military hospital, where he escaped death by a hair's breadth. It has since been discovered that, unknown to Delmas, Gerard had impersonated him and had secured a policy for 40,000 francs payable in his favor with the Nationale, and another for 20,000 with the Balaise (the latter of which Gerard had secured while Delmas was lying at the point of death in the military hospital).

Another automobile driver at the same barracks, M. Michel Duroux, was on April 25, 1917, impersonated by Gerard and a policy for 20,000 francs secured by Gerard in his own favor. Duroux, however, seems to have escaped scot free, though Gerard's servant testifies that following a dinner at which Duroux was a guest Gerard told her to wash carefully Duroux's plate.

With his two alleged accomplices Gerard is now going to be put on trial for his life.

An Alsatian, forty-six years old, immaculately dressed and well spoken, Gerard comes of hard-working, middle class parents who saved and slaved to furnish their promising son with the means of an education. This education Gerard obtained and with it an extraordinary knowledge of the properties of various poisons and fever bacilli. At the same time the young man imbibed the desire for a luxurious life and developed a penchant for the frailer members of the opposite sex. This combination proved too much for the ordinary earnings of a wine agent and insurance solicitor and the result was that Gerard was in 1914 sentenced to a year in prison and 3,000 francs fine for larceny and violation of the laws governing lotteries, and in 1917 was arrested for the theft of a number of articles from a large Paris department store. This second time, however, he shammed insanity and succeeded in having the alienists declare him irresponsible.

Gerard then, it is alleged, sought bigger game and entered upon a coldblooded scheme of insuring his friends' lives in his own favor by subterfuge and then removing them, by giving them poison derived from fungus growths and typhoid cultivations.

As Paris is asking, if it has been possible all along to murder a person by giving them a normal disease like typhoid fever, how many thousands of murderers and murderesses may have escaped undiscovered and unsuspected since the revolutionary advent of Pasteur?
